GENERAL NEWS.

(BY TELEGRAPH TO THE OREGONIAN.)

Decoration Day at Gettysburg

GETTYSBURG, May 30—The grand procession moved to the cemetery in a [illegible], which lasted till 5 o'clock. As Hon Edward McPherson introduced the president ringing cheers arose and President Hayes spoke as follows:

Fellow Citizens: The battle of Gettysburg will probably always be regarded as the battle which more than any other determined the result of the great civil war in the United States. The honored dead who fought and perished here will therefore be forever held in special and grateful remembrance. The great martyr of the conflict was Abraham Lincoln. He, by his immortal words here, has indissolubly linked his name and memory with the battle of Gettysburg. Lincoln gave his life and the brave men who responded to his call gave their lives for the union, for a stable, constitutional government. They believed that our institutions were equal to any emergency and that they ought to be maintained at the cost of property or of life. If anything in this place shall fitly honor the [illegible] we now wish remembered with gratitude [illegible], because beholding these scenes and [illegible] the example of the heroes who made [illegible] illustrious we shall be able to estimate [illegible] the value of our country and of her institutions, and be better prepared for the duties [illegible] under Providence have devolved upon us [illegible] heed to the words of Abraham Lincoln [illegible] highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain, that the nation under God shall have a new birth of freedom, and that a government of the people and by the people shall not perish from the earth. [Enthusiastic applause.]

President Hayes Interviewed

WASHINGTON, May 31.—The Times Washington correspondent interviewed Hayes, who firmly and decidedly said that no attempt to unseat him should succeed except the only lawful one of impeachment. He received his office from congress in a lawful, peaceable manner and intended to hand it down to his successor in the same way. He would submit to nothing short of successful impeachment.

Baltimore, May 31.—The Times' Philadelphia special says George Alfred Townsend had an interview with President Hayes at Gettysburg yesterday, most of which related to the Potter investigation. The president said there never was a time when our good Providence was so plainly leading us to peace and [illegible] we had less temptation to fly away [illegible] the evils of caucus government which coerces the timid, the unwary and the [illegible], we are now threatened with [illegible] perhaps conflict. The direct agents [illegible] brought on the rebellion were spirits [illegible] compared to the present fomenters [illegible] and general discord. Slavery was [illegible] property, or at any rate the white people [illegible] south were educated to believe so. [illegible] have that material stake for their spoil [illegible] war; but to disturb the country [illegible] in the same generation for nothing [illegible] spoils is nothing less than an [illegible]

[illegible], May 31.—A special says the [illegible] National Bank of Dallas suspended payment. The liabilities cannot be ascertained [illegible]. Due depositors, $22 000 nominal [illegible] $18,000.

An Anxious Mob.

[illegible], O., May 31—About 11 o'clock [illegible] a mob of about 20,000 people, [illegible] congregated to see what they could [illegible] of Webb the colored murderer [illegible] Ohio, made a rush over the guards, scaled the jail yard fence, [illegible] had torn down a greater [illegible] enclosure. Sheriff Ritchie telegraphed Governor Bishop, notifying him [illegible] and saying that unless he hung [illegible] the mob would tear down the [illegible]. The governor replied, directing him to [illegible] of the law. At 12.20 Sheriff Ritchie and Sheriff Gay, of [illegible] appeared with Webb, and [illegible] the noose about Webb's neck, [illegible] prayer being offered the drop [illegible]. Bonds Taken.

New York, May 31—The syndicate this [illegible] took from the treasury the remainder [illegible] of 4½ per cent bonds which [illegible] the $50,000,000 bargained for on [illegible] of April.

[illegible] Body, Distressed in Mind.

[illegible], May 31.—A dispatch from Rome [illegible] is ill in body and distressed in [illegible] cabals designed to prevent [illegible] proposes. It is reported the [illegible] a disposition to abdicate [illegible] Franchi is doing his utmost to [illegible] machinations of the Jesuits. The [illegible], on the other hand are striving to secure Cardinal Franchi's downfall.

WASHINGTON CITY.

Time of Adjournment.

Washington, May 31—The general expectation in political circles to-day is that the senate will concur with the house in fixing June 10th as the date of final adjournment.

Measures that will Fail.

It seems to be almost universally conceded [illegible] present session will terminate soon [illegible] to cause, among other things the [illegible] failure of Wood's tariff bill, the end of [illegible] financial legislation this summer, the [illegible] propositions to reduce the tax on to[illegible] to suspend payments to the sinking [illegible] and the probable defeat of the steam[illegible], also the almost certain failure of [illegible] subsidy bills and absolute certain [illegible] defeat of nearly every measure of a pri[illegible] which has not already passed [illegible] of the two houses.

A Fight Over the Border

New Orleans, May 31.—A special from [illegible] Pass says Escobedo is reported to have [illegible] Saragossa and is expected to attack [illegible] Negras. The Mexican government [illegible] under command of Gol Muncio have [illegible] meet him. A fight is expected.

Count Andrassy's language was very determined. He said the monarchy is vested on the basis of historical development and let him who touches it beware.

Events Tending to Peace

NEW YORK, May 31—A special from London gives an interview with Count Schouvaloff. The correspondent says the count insisted that the probabilities of war had mostly vanished and that Russia preferred peace to an armed conflict. All the greater obstacles outstanding between England and Russia had finally been removed. The terms of the agreement had been forwarded last night. Invitations to the congress not to the conference will be issued in the course of four days. Berlin has been selected as the place where the meeting will be held.

CONGRESSIONAL.

Senate

WASHINGTON, May 31

The president pro tem laid before the senate the concurrent resolution of the house providing for the final adjournment of congress on the 10th of June together with the amendment of the house of representatives fixing June 17th as the date.

Windom moved to refer the resolution and amendment to the committee on appropriations.

Hamlin thought the sooner the day of final adjournment should be fixed the better it would be.

On motion of Edmunds the resolution was laid on the table to be taken up to-morrow.

House

Sapp from the committee on public lands reported back the senate bill for the relief of settlers on public lands under the pre emption laws in reference to the computation of time for perfecting title and it passed.

QUIPS AND CRANKS

It is wickedly said that the restoration of the franking privilege has thrown hundreds of industrious washerwomen out of employment at the capital.

Toledo Commercial: Rev Mr Jasper's firm conviction that the world stands still comes from his having confined his observation to his native state of Virginia.

A Sunday school boy of Maysville, Ky, was asked by the superintendent if his father was a Christian. "Yes, sir," he replied, "but he is not working at it much."

"We shall not urge Mr Tilton to confess. We have too much regard for Mrs Woodhull not to mention the other hearts that would ache," says the Buffalo Express.

Judge Tyner, writing from Paris to the postmaster general, says somewhat plaintively that "prices are so high that letters of credit seem to shrivel as you look at them."

When a Rhode Island clergyman is in needy circumstances his parishioners give him a clam bake and the clergyman's wife generally realizes on the life insurance policy about a month afterwards.

Smith does not think that his daughter's beau should stay so late in the evening. The other morning she was praising the young man for his strength of character. "Yes," said Smith, "he has great staying powers."

That was a happy response of Gen Grant's when at Jerusalem. A committee of citizens came out to meet him and to tender him a public reception. He replied, "Not in the sight of the Mount of Olives." The incident recalls the remark of Douglas Jerrold, who, when told by a Red Republican in Paris that Louis Blanc was next to Christ, naively asked, "Which side?"

Sunday School Times: There was a little fellow who knew Mother Goose better than he knew his Bible. One Sunday he was asked in his class, "Who were thrown into the fiery furnace?" That was too much for him. The question was passed, the answer came promptly, "Shadrach, Meshach and Abednego." This was a mortification to the little fellow, and when the next question came, "Who put them in?" he answered with a jump, "Little Johnny Green."

Workingmen and Chinese.

PORTLAND, May 31

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN

The workingmen of this county have as one of their first principles opposition to Chinese. It is reported that some of them are very earnest in the support of Mr Mitchell. Examination of the records of congress will show that when the anti Chinese bill which is before congress was being discussed before the committee on education and labor to whom it was referred, all the representatives, Republican and Democratic, senators and members of the house from California went before that committee and argued the great evils of Mongolian immigration, while Mr Mitchell did not find time to open his lips against this great evil. Ought working men to support his ticket?

The Latest Gold Field

From the Baltimore Bulletin

The latest find of gold which promises great results is in the island of Papua or New Guinea, and this discovery is of a character so significant as to cause considerable excitement in the adjacent continent of Australia. The gold is found in black sand placers in conjunction with magnetic oxide of iron occurring there in small scales, none of which so far weigh over a grain. It is also found in quartz rock, and the existence of gold bearing quartz in considerable quantities is unmistakably proved, while all the geological indications are favorable to an extensive development of the gold fields. Several expeditions are about to sail to Port Morsby from Australia already, and should the discoveries turn out to be rich there will doubtless be a rush of gold hunters thither from all parts of the world before many months, and the experiences of California, Australia and New Zealand will be repeated in New Guinea.

AN AWFUL CATASTROPHE.

Fearful Disaster in the Straits of Dover

Two German Ironclads Collide and one of them Sinks in five Minutes—The Boilers of the Sinking Vessel Explode as she goes Down and adds Horror to the Scene—A Long Death Roll—Only 18 Persons out of 400 known to be Saved

BY TELEGRAPH.

LONDON, May 31—The German ironclad Grosser Kurfurst came in collision with the ironclad Konig Wilhelm at 11 this morning. The accident took place three miles off Folkestone. The Grosser Kurfurst sank almost immediately after she was struck. The boilers [illegible] exploded as she went down. The weather was bright and the sea calm at the time. It is reported from Deal that only eighteen persons out of a complement of 400 officers and men on board the Grosser Kurfurst were saved. Boats went from the shore and were sent from other vessels of the German fleet to the assistance of the drowning people, and it is hoped that more lives were saved.

DOVER, May 31—The German squadron, consisting of three ironclads, the Preussen, Grosser Kurfurst and Konig Wilhelm, passed Dover at 5.45 this morning bound for Plymouth, whence it is expected they were to sail for Gibraltar. When the squadron was off Sandgate, about five miles from shore, one of the ironclads was observed to be gradually heeling over on her beam ends and the men were seen crowding on the bulwarks. In about five minutes the vessel went down on her side, her boiler blowing up as she sank. Boats from the other ironclads were launched and a number of Folkestone fishing smacks near by hurried to the scene. It is hoped many lives were saved. The Folkestone life boat was launched but arrived too late to be of service. Several steamers have gone to the scene of the disaster from Dover. It is believed the Konig Wilhelm, which ran into the Grosser Kurfurst, is badly damaged.

NEW YORK, May 31—London dispatches state the German embassy is informed that 400 persons were drowned by the sinking of the ironclad Grosser Kurfurst. The German ambassador with the crown prince have gone by special train to the scene of the disaster. It seems the vessels were under full headway when the Koenig Wilhelm ran into the Grosser Kurfurst. The shock was terrific, the latter vessel filling and sinking in five minutes after the collision. To add to the horrors of the situation the boilers of the vessel exploded, scattering death and destruction in every direction.

A telegram to the admiralty says of the sinking of the Grosser Kurfurst that about 300 perished and 200 have been saved. This comes from the coast guard at Folkestone.

A dispatch from Dover says it is reported the Grosser Kurfurst carried a crew of 600 men, of whom between 300 and 400 are supposed to be drowned. A telegram to Lloyds from Folkestone repeats the report first telegraphed that only 18 men were rescued, but its correctness is doubted. All previous reports say the life boats were lowered from the other ironclads immediately, and a large number of small craft from Dover and Folkestone hastened to the locality.

According to the report of the disaster received by the admiralty the collision occurred seven miles southeast of Folkestone. The latest dispatch from Dover says the forward part of the ironclad Koenig Wilhelm is under water. W H Smith, first lord of the admiralty, stated in the house of commons this afternoon that according to the reports received by the lords of admiralty from 180 to 200 of the crew of Grosser Kurfurst had been saved and 300 perished. The Grosser Kurfurst was the flagship of the squadron. The admiral commanding the squadron was among the saved.

NOTES AND OPINIONS

The sale of lands during the month of April to actual settlers on the line of the Northern Pacific in Minnesota and Dakota foots up 45,157 acres railroad lands and 162,300 government lands; in all 207,457 acres.

It is a curious result of the obliquities of the Beecher Tilton business that Tilton's vehement denial of his responsibility for his wife's reported delicate situation is as little credited as her seemingly voluntary confession of a shameless crime.

The Cincinnati Gazette says that one of the reasons which has led the Ohio legislature to redistrict the state so as to give the Democrats a majority of the representatives in congress is to secure a vote for the Democratic candidates in case there is no election of president by the people in 1880.

The Camerouians in Washington are elated at the neglect of the Pennsylvania convention to recognize the administration in any manner, but the friends of Mr Hayes say he can stand it if the Camerons can, and that they need not be surprised to find themselves defeated at the coming election.

The late Charles Morgan of New York disposed of ten millions of property by a will of only four lines, in accordance with the laws of the state, and at last accounts no one contests. It will be strange if several women do not claim that at some period of his life they were his lawfully wedded wives.

The New Secretary of the Smithsonian Institute

(New York Evening Post)

Professor Spencer F Baird has had nearly thirty years' experience as assistant to his distinguished predecessor. He was born at Reading, Pa, on the 3d of February, 1823, and soon after his graduation from Dickinson college was made its professor of natural science. His contributions to scientific literature have been many, the department of ornithology having occupied a good share of his attention for the last twenty years. In 1871 he was appointed by President Grant U S commissioner of fisheries, and in that capacity he has superintended the work of restoring the supply of food fishes in various waters whence they had disappeared.

"Farewell Forever" to Boston

[From the New York Tribune.]

George Francis Train was unable to give his proposed lecture in Boston on Sunday in consequence of a civic order forbidding Sunday evening entertainments at any theater. The lecturer immediately left for this city, vowing, says the Boston Post, that no amount of money or influence could induce him to visit Boston again. A large crowd of Mr Train's admirers who gathered to witness his abrupt departure endeavored to persuade him to reconsider this rash determination, but all to no purpose, and raising his hat and waving it in the air he ejaculated, "Fare well, boys, forever," and disappeared.

The Society of Friends throughout the world to-day numbers less than it did a century ago. The Orthodox number 300,000 and the Hicksites (Socinian) 50,000. The chief cause of decline is said to be the system of disowning members for slight deviations from the doctrines and policy of the society.

An Insane Man's Freaks.

From the Vancouver Independent

A few days since a party of hunters found a crazy man in the woods ten miles from Goldendale on the Simcoe mountains. He was captured, no very hard task, as he was [illegible] taken to Goldendale where he was examined and ordered committed to the insane asylum at Steilacoom. It was ascertained that his name is Martin Fox, that he has relations in Illinois and Ohio. He arrived at Goldendale ten days from San Francisco, bought a dollar's worth of bacon, a frying pan and a hatchet, went to the woods and had been laying in a windfall where he was found for five weeks, provisions reduced in stock to the hatchet and frying pan. He had been many days without water, his fingers being worn at the ends in digging for it in the ravine adjacent to his hiding place. Sheriff Schuster brought him down the river on Monday, staying over night at Vancouver, taking him next morning to Steilacoom.

Another southern claimant. The man in whose house Lincoln died asks the government to take the place off his hands at several times its value. He is the small soul who sent in a long bill for the use of the place, charging even for the soap with which the physicians washed their hands.

The Omaha Herald seriously remarks: "A famous soldier is among us, Gen Rufus Ingalls, who carries more brains around with him to the square inch than can be found on the shoulders of most men, either in civil or military life."

THE BOGUS BILL.

The Position and Action of President Wright Explained—Was Willing the Bill Should Pass the Senate Trusting to Amendments in the House—The Bill Useless in its Present Shape

The following telegram has been received by THE OREGONIAN:

WOODSTOCK, Vt, May 31, 1878

Wright was so anxious to get out of the senate and away from Mitchell that he was willing a bill should pass even with objectionable features, trusting to chance for amendments in the house; but I understand he denies having consented to the senate bill in its present shape. Unless the bill be materially amended it is of no earthly use to pass it, and at this late stage of the session the chances are against any bill. But for Mitchell's and Jacobs' opposition a proper bill could have been passed long before this, and the work of construction would again be going on.

WASHINGTON, May 31, 1878

To J C Ainsworth, Portland, Oregon: In my reply to Delegate Jacobs' letter on the 25th inst, after stating our objections to the senate bill, I also state that those objections can be remedied in the house. Also that "over ten thousand stockholders are anxious for a bill that will enable them to push forward the great work, and trust that you will not refuse your efforts in hastening this result."

C B WRIGHT, President

OREGON

Curry county now claims a population of 2,000.

The Port Orford Cedar Company's mill cuts about 1,500,000 feet of white cedar lumber a year.

J E Laughlin, who came to Oregon in 1847, died recently in California, aged [illegible]. He was a relative of the Laughlins of Yamhill.

Thomas Brown, of North Yamhill, lost his barn by fire recently. It was set on fire by boys who were playing in the hay with matches and barely escaped with their lives. Loss, $[illegible]000.

L L Williams, railroad agent at Hillsboro, has shipped three car loads of lumber from Portland to that place for the purpose of building him a warehouse.

The Oregon State Grange has elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Master, Wm Cyrus, of Linn; overseer, A R Shipley, of Clackamas; lecturer, W B Thomas, of Walla Walla; steward, W M Hileary, of Marion; assistant steward, M L Nichols, of Washington; chaplain, W H Gray, of Clatsop; secretary, N W Randall, of Clackamas; treasurer, Thomas Smith, of Linn; Ceres, Mrs M J Train, of Linn; Pomona, Mrs Shipley, of Clackamas; Flora, Mrs Durham, of Yamhill; lady assistant steward, Mrs Hileary, of Marion; member of the executive committee, A Holder, of Benton.

Farming on an Extensive Scale.

[From the Bellingham Bay Mail.]

While at Laconner last week, we had the pleasure of visiting a few of the celebrated farms or grain fields which adjoin that prosperous little town. As many are doubtless aware, there are over six thousand acres of perhaps the most productive land on the American continent under cultivation within view of the town hall. Most of the grain has already been sown and presents a most promising appearance. But we observed a few fields undergoing the process of cultivation, and the object of this paragraph is merely to convey an idea of the complete system of operation in practice there. In one field cultivated by Messrs Sullivan & Corne[illegible] we found 13 men at work operating with 24 horses, four breaking plows, five harrows, one seeder and one roller, plowing and seeding down the wild land at the astonishing rate of eight to ten acres per day. We refer to this as a specimen of the systematic style of cultivation practised on the Swinomish flats.

Rate of Interest.

The state grange at its recent session at Salem adopted the following:

WHEREAS, It appears that the present high rate of interest has a tendency to embarrass the industrial interests of the country and to retard the development of its resources; therefore

Resolved, That we are in favor of memorializing our next legislature to repeal the present ruinous usury law, and to establish in its stead a rate per cent for the use of money which will justify its employment in developing the great agricultural and mechanical industries of the country.

Chickens Come Home to Roost

[New York World (Dem.)]

The proposition of Mr Curtis, made in the last Republican convention in this state, to declare "the lawful title of Rutherford B Hayes to the presidency as clear and perfect as that of George Washington," was voted down by the enormous vote of 295 nays to 109 yeas. This was done under the leadership of Senator Conkling, who has since declared that when the truth comes to be known about the election in Louisiana, President Hayes and his administration will be sunk in infamy.

Detroit Free Press: We are glad to learn even at this late day that Thomas Jefferson would turn aside rather than step on a bumblebee. He was barefooted when he felt this way, of course.

JOHN MORRISSEY

[From the New York Star.]

Since the news came that Senator John Morrissey was dangerously ill in [illegible] and that his chances for recovery were [illegible] general interest has been felt in information relating to his career and in incidents drawn from his early life.

His early life was spent amid [illegible] associations that developed both his [illegible] and combative traits as well as his sporting propensities. As a boy [illegible] reputation as a fighter [illegible] led to unpleasant interviews with the [illegible]. When only eighteen years old he [illegible] served drinks behind Mr. Alexander H[illegible] to S[illegible] and he introduced him into the prize ring is largely [illegible] employer [illegible] Park Row [illegible] by the pugilistic fraternity [illegible] a fight to which he was [illegible] but offered to bring "my bar keeper Jack Morrissey" who he thought could clean out the whole gang. On returning to Troy he told Morrissey the circumstance and the latter at once put himself in training to wipe out the insult to his employer. Several months afterward Morrissey arrived in this city and betook himself at once to Park Row. Pugilism was then rampant and he had no difficulty in getting into an impromptu fight at once. Dutch Charley gave him a mauling and in the course of half an hour left the Troy champion insensible. He was borne away on a shutter but Charley and his friends took such good care of their victim that he enrolled himself in the same gang as soon as he had recovered. Morrissey at once took up his residence in this city supported himself as an emigrant runner and made himself a terror to that fraternity by his quickness in anger and fierceness in fight. In his many encounters with other runners he was never beaten although in some of them belaying pins were freely used by his antagonists. Tom McCann a noted bully and friend of Tom Hyer challenged Morrissey to a rough and tumble encounter. The challenge was promptly accepted and the fighters adjourned to the St Charles hotel, at Leonard street and Broadway to have their mill.

The veteran Tom Hamblin then a guest of the hotel was a spectator of the contest. McCann was rated as a terrible fighter and in the half hour consumed gave Morrissey punishment that would have sickened three ordinary men. In the melee a stove was upset, and the burning coals fell upon Morrissey's arm and side burning him badly. These only redoubled his ferocity and when McCann was nearly spent by his own exertions Morrissey went in and finished him.

Tom Hyer a friend of McCann made some offensive remarks about Morrissey's conduct in this fight which reached the latter's ear. Much bitterness of feeling was engendered and when the two men met some days afterward at Canal street and Broadway, the champion and the neophyte pulled off their coats for a street fight but were separated by the police before a blow was struck.

Although he was heartily inimical to Hyer and was regarded by the enemies of the champion as the most promising of bruisers then aspiring to ring triumphs his first appearance as a prize fighter was on the Pacific Coast. The way that he managed to reach the Golden Gate is very characteristic of the man. When the gold fever seized him, in 1851 he was almost penniless. The cards had been turning very badly for him. By collusion of the sailors he managed to stow himself away in the hold of a California packet and he endured both hunger and thirst for four days before he deemed it safe to face the captain. The skipper, on discovering him treated him with every conceivable indignity and brutality. During the voyage, however a mutiny broke out among the crew and Morrissey was able to render such service both in discovering and quelling the outbreak, that he was given a cabin passage for the remainder of the voyage.

Among those who were infected with the gold fever about the same time was George Thompson a veteran of the ring, who had trained Hyer for his great fight with Yankee Sullivan. Morrissey had been a partisan of Sullivan in that contest. Moreover, Thompson was an Englishman and aspired to the title, "Champion of the Pacific Coast." These considerations were sufficient to elicit a challenge which Thompson accepted. They met on Mare island near Benicia California on August 31 1852. Eleven rounds were fought in sixteen minutes and Thompson it is said had none the worst of the contest when he struck Morrissey a foul blow, and so lost the fight. Thompson afterward said that Morrissey's friends at the ring side had become so hostile and excited that he struck the foul blow deliberately, as the only chance to save himself.

Early in 1852 Morrissey returned to this city, and great efforts were made at once to bring about a fight between him and Tom Hyer. The champion had rather provoked a fight by his unkindly criticism of the conduct of Morrissey's friends in the mill with George Thompson. Morrissey challenged and $100 forfeit was put up by each party. Hyer by virtue of his right as the challenged party fixed the amount of the stake money at $10 000 a side. This was more than Morrissey's friends were able to furnish so the aspiring youngster was compelled to forfeit his $100, and the fight was off.

Within a few months Morrissey found an antagonist in Yankee Sullivan. The stake was $1 000 a side. They met October 12 1852 at Boston corners on the boundary line between New York and Massachusetts. Sullivan was then forty three years old and was three inches shorter and some twenty pounds lighter than his youthful antagonist. As a boxer he was vastly the superior of the youngster.

Morrissey's face in a few rounds was pounded into the hue and appearance of a raw beefsteak. By all precedents of human endurance he was whipped in ten rounds. In one of these rounds at least a dozen "facers" fell unreturned to his share. He became so weak that he could hardly stand. He could not raise his hands high enough to make an efficient guard and yet in the thirty seventh round his "second wind" came to his aid and he began the most damaging rally that he had made during the fight. Rushing Sullivan to the ropes he administered a terrible pounding, which the latter could not avoid by his favorite ruse of dropping. When the round ended the seconds and umpires began a wrangle which ended in a free fight. Sullivan was still fresh enough to take a hand in it and became so closely engaged that he did not hear the referee call "time." Not only the usual grace of eight seconds but two minutes elapsed and Sullivan had not toed the scratch. The referee gave the fight and the stakes to Morrissey although he was unquestionably the worst punished man.

Within the next year several efforts were made to bring about a fight between Morrissey and Tom Hyer but the champion was hard to coax from his retirement. Bill Poole a warm partisan of Hyer at last took up the challenge and agreed to meet Morrissey in a rough and tumble fight for $100 a side. They came together July [illegible] on the wharf at the foot of Amos street. Poole's friends said that Morrissey was [illegible] beaten. Morrissey's friends maintained that if he got the worst of the fight it was because Poole's friends took a hand in it.

Three months afterward Morrissey and Hyer met by agreement at the [illegible] Hyer pro[illegible] would fight with them and nothing else. As Morrissey would use none but nature's weapons there was no fight.

From 1853 to 1859 Morrissey wore the title of champion without question. He had numerous bar room rows and rough and tumble fights in which his well known trick, "bucking," made him always victor, but no one cared to meet him in a twenty-four foot ring. Since his return to New York, he had been making his living principally by dealing faro. His first employers were Petry & McCann who dealt in Church street. [illegible] soon afterward retired and McCann [illegible] Morrissey went to work at 8 Barclay street. His next [illegible] with Matthias Danser but Morrissey's share in the business was so small [illegible] During those months he accompanied the famous Flora Temple in her trotting tour through the south [illegible].

On his return to New York he opened the [illegible] street the only place [illegible] owned. He at the same time in company with Schaffer and others opened a [illegible] in the Gem saloon which then stood on the site of the old Broadway Theatre. His gambling operations were uniformly successful and he [illegible] great reputation [illegible] ring fighting when John C. Heenan, a fellow [illegible] and returned Californian arrived in this city with the avowed intention of winning and wearing the champion belt. The red flag was adroitly shaken by mutual friends and the long talked of fight between Morrissey and Heenan was arranged for October 20 1858 for $2 500 a side and the championship. The mill was fought on Long Point Island in Canada. Morrissey was in perfect condition weighing 163 pounds. Heenan who overtopped his antagonist by nearly three inches weighed 190 pounds and was not well trained.

In the first round Heenan began operations with four sledge hammer blows on Morrissey's face forcing the latter to the ropes. Morrissey scarcely returned a blow but Heenan accidentally struck a stake and broke two of his knuckles. He however finished the round by throwing Morrissey heavily and falling on him.

In the second round Heenan repeated his hits at Morrissey's face and got several body blows in return, and again closed the round by throwing Morrissey showing himself the better man both in hitting and wrestling.

Morrissey's ox like patience helped him through and in the third round he had some advantage both in the fighting and in the fall. Heenan had his face marked for the first time in the fight during the fourth round and he also had the worst of it in the close. In the fifth round he got Morrissey's head into chancery but the latter broke away before much damage was done him. He was so dazed that in his retreat Heenan got an opening at Morrissey's jaw and the champion was clean knocked down and almost out of time. Morrissey was too weak to raise his hands when he toed the scratch for the sixth round. But Heenan was also weakening rapidly, while the former was improving every second. He continued to improve to the close of the fight in the eleventh round when Heenan's second threw up the sponge. The fight had lasted twenty one minutes. Morrissey at once retired peremptorily from the ring. All efforts to bring about another fight between him and Heenan proved unavailing. He did agree to a private fight and met Heenan on December 30 1858 in a barn at McComb's dam but the police interfered before a blow was struck. He still appeared occasionally in sparring exhibitions, and at one for his own benefit in 1868 he realized $2 500.

This lucky hit was the money capital from which he has since realized a fortune. He invested it at once as capital in the Gem faro game, and has since experienced no serious reverse of luck. He went to England to witness and bet upon the Heenan Sayers mill and as he always bet against the Benicia Boy he improved his fortune greatly by the trip. On his return to this city he added politics to his other avocations and became very influential in the down town wards. By his political influence he made himself powerful in protecting gamblers from police interference and the gamblers thus became ardent ministers to his ambition.

He made use of his following and influence to force himself into partnership with the lottery and policy managers, reaping therefrom a princely income. This was prior to his election to congress. When he was forced to give up his lottery income he again used his power to force himself into a controlling share in no less than twenty five games that were each doing a good business. After having owned a game for several years at 11 West Houston street he moved to 576 Broadway quitting that location only when he formed the combination with Danser which made 818 Broadway the most considerable gambling saloon in this country. He ceased active participation in its business after his election to congress and removed his own game to 8 West Twenty fourth street, which he opened in 1870 and sold out about the time of his difficulty with Police Commissioner Oliver Charlick. Since that time he has not personally owned any faro game in this city but his money has been liberally used to back trusted gamblers and paying games. The Saratoga club house between racing and games of chance has always paid him reasonably well but the hard times since the panic reduced his incomes to little more than could have been realized from that money invested in securities.

Morrissey's characteristics as a fighter were almost superhuman endurance backed by great strength and little science. As a gambler he was liberal and conciliatory toward players but selfish and exacting to the last degree toward professional players. When he made up his mind there was no budging him from his decision. His course in the presidential pool selling excitement illustrates this characteristic. He felt that he was entitled to his commission and no consideration of future benefit could induce him to alter his determination.

In addition to all their free drinks Morrison and [illegible] went to New Orleans a year ago to investigate the elections drank brandy sherry claret champagne and old stag whisky amounting to $131 which was paid for by the Democratic sergeant at arms. The total expenses of the trip were $50,000.

It is said that Florence now yields six times as many suicides in proportion to population as Paris while atrocious crimes are frequent. In short the once bright and happy city has become a most disagreeable place to live in and an unpleasant place to visit all on account of an indebtedness beyond its capacity to pay.

MARTIN HEISKILL ON COON AND POSSUM

[From That Same Old Coon by Frank R Stockton Scribner for June.]

We were sitting on the store porch of a small Virginia village. I was one of the party and Martin Heiskill was the other one. Martin had been out fishing, which was an unusual thing for him.

"Yes sir," said he as he held up the small string [illegible] he had laid carefully under his chair when he sat down to light his [illegible] got to show [illegible] that I waste time that way [illegible] huntin fur a thing [illegible] sot on trees now [illegible]

I ventured to state that the [illegible] were occasionally [illegible]

This still [illegible] the fishes Martin [illegible] to [illegible] them now [illegible] I think we'd better.

Martin was a [illegible] fellow and [illegible] he had [illegible] travelled much and had [illegible] ideas of cities nor indeed of much of anything out [illegible] of his native backwoods. But of those backwoods he knew more than any other man I ever met. He liked to talk but he resented [illegible]

Martin [illegible] glad to change the subject. "Do you think there'll be many coons about this fall?"

"About as many as common I reckon," he answered. "What do you want to know fur?"

"I'd like to go out coon hunting [illegible] that's something I have never tried."

"Well," said he, "I don't suppose you're gwine [illegible] will make much difference [illegible] better go possum huntin. You kin eat a possum."

"Do you ever eat coons?" I asked.

"Eat coons!" he exclaimed with contempt. "Why there isn't a nigger in this county'd eat a coon. They ain't fit [illegible]"

"I should think they'd be as good as possums," said I. "They feed on pretty much the same things, don't they?"

"Well there ain't much difference that way, but a possum's a mighty different thing from a coon when ye come to eat him. A possum's [illegible] like a bird o' tree [illegible] Why [illegible]"

I was about to refer to [illegible] stories but I refrained.

"For my [illegible] continued Martin, "there's [illegible] and likes [illegible] fust rate but [illegible] he says [illegible] depending on what people say. Now I know what I'm talking about [illegible] coons ain't fit fur human beings to eat."

"What makes you hunt 'em then?" I asked.

[illegible] struck a [illegible] under his chair to relight his [illegible] "I've told [illegible] that's one thing, an' [illegible] talk about fun [illegible] that's another thing. [illegible] think you [illegible] pretty hard work to you."

"I suppose it would," I said. "There are many things that would be hard work to me that would be nothing but sport to an old hunter like you."

"You're right sir. You never spoke truer than that in your life. There's no man inside o' six counties that's hunted more'n I have. I've been at it ever since I was a youngster an' I've got a lot o' fun out uv it—more fun than anything else fur that matter. You see afore the war people used to go huntin more for real sport than they do now. An' it wasn't because there was more game in the county then than there is now, fur there wasn't half as much. There's more game in Virginia now than there's been any time this fifty years."

A Democratic Protest

From the Cincinnati Enquirer

We trust that it is not the deliberate design of the Democrats in congress to reopen the presidential question. There can be no rational expectation of unseating President Hayes. The Democrats are still in congress who urged the passage of the electoral commission bill, which had little or no ground in the constitution, no ground in equity and not a shadow of excuse in politics from the Democratic standpoint. The presidential question has been once—and finally—tried before a tribunal which Democrats created. There is no hope of reversing the decision of that tribunal. To change it it would be necessary not only to go behind the returns but behind the law of the land. The task [illegible] impossible before is [illegible] difficult now. As it is not intelligently expected that President Hayes can be unseated [illegible] move for [illegible] of the [illegible] capital. Even for this purpose we cannot but think the policy [illegible]

THE PICTURE IN A DEAD MAN'S EYE

[New York Times.]

If as [illegible] the pathway of [illegible] are strewn with murdered myths of antiquity [illegible] equally true that of [illegible] inquiry has been instrumental [illegible] previously rejected superstition. From comparatively old times [illegible] fancies has [illegible] jury compressed [illegible] that at the [illegible] ascended [illegible] imperishably ject last visible to the [illegible] upon the dead retina. Most ably photographed [illegible] retributive readers will recall [illegible] justice based [illegible] victim of a [illegible] his photograph [illegible] at least one [illegible] half a dozen of an acting drama [illegible] novels founded on [illegible] the same sensational [illegible] terrible thesis has [illegible] The fact witness of such [illegible] not possible for it is the fact that [illegible] learned over and over again [illegible] physiologists of es[illegible] lished [illegible] metaphysical [illegible] down as among but fancy [illegible] the utter [illegible] that his grim has often [illegible] was founded conception of [illegible] circumstances fact and that under [illegible] identifiable development of such [illegible] ages, latent the [illegible] simple and practicable photographs is a very [illegible] process. The moral is that whatever is beautiful has always in some strange way a capacity for rising from the dead and contains within itself the germ of its own resurrection. Says a German from whom Mr Emerson has caught the inspiration of more than one aphorism Die [illegible] [illegible] fading beauty of that poetical course, under the symbol of that poetical hackneyed blossom. Plato dreamiest of a dreamers has the fancy that Mr Emerson has parodied from the German in

For if the eye were made for seeing,
Then beauty is its own excuse for being.

In one of his wonderful dialogues Himself and cronies are engaged in discussing the beautiful over goblets of the Falernian when in one of the pregnant pauses of the occasion the philosopher observes as follows: The beauty is neither immortal like the gods nor, like men mortal but in the verdure of the valleys lives and blossoms for a day having another life to borrow. What the old man means is that while under externality beauty is ephemeral, in her interior reality she never dies wherefore he adds that in the blossoms of the valley she is constantly dying and constantly rising again from the dust.

The regeneration of the [illegible] myth is in its way an example of the longevity of all things beautiful that may well point a moral to such scientific Alcibiades as have dared to speculate whether poetry can co exist with science. When as in this instance a deeper science constantly verifies what a shallow science has denied the eternity of the beautiful because it is beautiful—one need not trouble one's self to argue where argument is not only loss of [illegible] but loss of temper and patience also.

However a glance at the evidence. Deydig and other eminent physiologists have so repeatedly stated the one isolated fact that the fresh retina of frogs and other animals has a reddish tinge that the point is familiar to the most cursory reader of histological treatises. This fact alone though significant, demonstrated nothing and for years it lay fallow. Recently Prof Boll (Zur Anatomie und Physiologie der Retina), the celebrated Du Bois Reymond and Prof Kuhne (Ueber de Sehpurpur) have contributed very important data to retinal physiology all of which have been printed within the last two years. It appears from these as yet untranslated essays and volumes that not only is the living retina always red but that its color is subject to material alterations from the action of light. The coloration is, it should be premised, limited to the external aspect of the retinal rods a considerable proportion of which, at least in the frog are also of a bluish green tint. It exists in all animals having retinal rods invertebrates as well as vertebrates, Boll having ascertained it in the cephalopods and anthropoids and in all the fishes and amphibia brought under examination. In reptilians and birds the colored oil globules—most beautiful microscopic objects interfere with its detection and in the retina of the lizard and coluber natrix, which offer no retinal rods to scientific inspection, the nervous organ of vision being with cones only, Kuhne was unable to discover any traces of coloring matter. It is absent in the bat behind the numerous spots furnished with globules though present elsewhere but the long and delicate rods of the owl (Athene noctua) are of a red of brilliant intensity not occurring in day ranging animals, violet in its tint, and fading very slowly on exposure to light. In man the retinal rod was first discovered by Zuckerkandl in examining the eyes of an executed criminal. Adler states that the color is absent in the eyes of blind persons.

These are dull details only adduced because they are the material symbols of a recent new theory of the perception of color, and probably of color blindness. The important fact is that the retinal rod is very sensitive to the action of light persists after death for from 12 to 24 hours if the eye is kept in a darkened room but is rapidly whitened to a silvery luster in a few minutes when exposed to ordinary daylight although it may in some animals be regenerated even after a post mortem whitening by placing it in a dark box.

The rapidity of this post mortem process depends upon the constitution of the light to which the retina is exposed as well as upon its intensity. The rays of the spectrum between the yellow and the green possess, according to Kuhne, a peculiar influence in this respect while the retina fades very gradually indeed when the rods are only exposed to the rays between the green and the violet end of the spectrum. As concerns the living [illegible] red light darkens the rods until they exhibit a deep brown which in fading to red again under exposure to ordinary light passes through a yellow stage. Yellow rays only render the color clearer green rays of moderate intensity produce a purple alteration of the red rods while rendering the bluish green ones more brilliant. Blue and violet have proximately but in less degree the same action as green and ultra violet no action at all. It will be gathered from these data that retinal inquiry is likely to result in a new and well grounded theory of color and of color perception—in a word in the resolution of one of the most intricate problems of physics that of the relation of color to nervous impression feeling sentiment and idea.

But the picturesque aspect of the subject and the aspect in which it appeals to the imagination most specifically is after all the old question as to the possibility of obtaining persistent images on the dead retina—a question that has been settled in the affirmative by Kuhne, who having placed the decapitated head of a rabbit in [illegible] exposed it in the first instance to the light of a window of ground glass, then hardened the retina of the eye in a five per cent solution of alum for twenty four hours in the dark and thus obtained a distinct and identifiable photograph of the window upon its red posterior aspect. Such images are scientifically styled optograms and retinas thus treated can be dried and mounted for permanent illustrations of the curiosities of retinal physiology. This question has been carefully tested recently with eyes of horses and dogs in the dissecting room of one of our colleges with the result of finding, as maintained by German physiologists that such optograms can be readily taken within one hour after the death of the animal and developed by rapidly dissecting out the retina and immediately immersing it in a 10 per cent solution of alum salt. [illegible] Prof. Huxley somewhere observes, [illegible] ways of science are strewn with the [illegible] myths of antiquity, it is equally [illegible] of late physiological inquiry has [illegible] instrumental in resuscitating many a [illegible] rejected superstition. From com[illegible] old times—for the nineteenth cen[illegible] compresses ages into decades—has de[illegible] curious supposition that the ob[illegible] visible to the dying eye is imperisha[illegible] stamped upon the dead retina. Most [illegible] will recall to mind tales of retributive [illegible] based upon the identification and con[illegible] of a murderer through the agency of [illegible] photograph in a dead man's eye; and [illegible] once within the last ten years the plot [illegible] drama, not to mention half a doz[illegible] novels, founded upon the same [illegible] has been made to turn upon the terrible [illegible] such a rogue's gallery. The fact—[illegible] the fact that such testimony is possi[illegible] been authoritatively denied, over [illegible] again, by physiologists of estab[illegible] reputation; sneered at as a relic of [illegible] speculation reinforced by mor[illegible] and finally scoffed down as among [illegible] impossibilities. But it turns out, as [illegible] been the case before, that this grim [illegible] of poetic justice was founded in [illegible] that under certain circumstances the [illegible] of such in articulo mortis im[illegible] though they are, as identifiable [illegible] is a very simple and practicable [illegible] The moral is that whatever is beau[illegible] always, in some strange way, a ca[illegible] from the dead, and contains [illegible] the germ of its own resurrec[illegible] a German mystic, from whom Mr. [illegible] caught the inspiration of more [illegible]: Die rose ist ohn warum, [illegible] blühet; typifying beauty, of [illegible] symbol of that poetically [illegible] Plato, dreamiest of all [illegible] the same fancy that Mr. Emer[illegible] from the German in [illegible] eye was made for seeing, [illegible] is its own excuse for being." It is, therefore one of the undeniable verities of science that, under favorable circumstances, it would be a matter of no serious difficulty to identify a murderer by this process, the fact furnishing only another illustration of the proverb that the strangest dreams of romance are often verified by reality. No doubt a coroner's jury would treat the revelations of a dead retina with a little pardonable disrespect to begin with, but a single demonstration would suffice to convince even the most skeptical of professional jurymen.

THE ARMY.

IMPORTANCE OF THE ARTILLERY BRANCH—COMPARISON WITH THAT OF OTHER COUNTRIES.

In addressing the artillery school at Fortress Monroe, a few days ago, General Sherman said:

"Most of them had left West Point a few years ago, no doubt, with the idea that they knew more than anybody else, [laughter] and that there was nothing more for them to learn, but they had found out long before this that such was not the case. The profession of the soldier was not only one of the most honorable, but the most important in this country. The people looked to their army for protection. The lives of our citizens were in their care, and it behooved them to be well fitted to fulfill the duties imposed upon them. In order to do this intelligently it required constant study. The artillery was, perhaps, the most important arm of the military service, and, owing to the constant changes, required more constant and persistent study than any other branch. There was no such thing as learning it all and then stopping, for improvements were being made every day. It is true, just at the present time our government is doing very little in this way. The country was poor and could not afford the expense, but as soon as it recuperates from the effects of the late war he was satisfied she would provide ample funds for this purpose. At present we were doing what we could with our limited means, and allowing the nations of Europe to do most of the experimenting, and we would take advantage of their results at the proper time. The great nations of Europe were better provided with the latest style of arms than our own. The fifteen inch Rodman gun was the best we had, but it was not equal to those of England, Italy and Germany, and he greatly feared in case of a war with any of those powers, notwithstanding our bravery and intelligence, we would be at a great disadvantage. But the time would come, and that not far distant, when we would have an ample supply of the best to be had in the market. He then spoke of the old style of six-pounders that were in use when Gen. Getty and himself were at West Point, which were touched off with a torch or red-hot iron, and sketched the progress in the improvements down to the present time. This he said, should be sufficient evidence that, notwithstanding that they had graduated at West Point and at this school, their studies had only commenced, and he charged them all to be on the alert, to read up the latest magazines of European countries and to keep up with the improvements of the day, and in order to do so they would have to study every day, even though they should attain the age of eighty years."

The New York Herald Editors.

[New York Letter to Philadelphia Times.]

Thomas Connery, the managing editor of the Herald, is a queer-looking person, about forty to forty-five years old. He is a son of the Coroner Connery whose name was carried to temporary fame by the Burdell murder excitement many years ago. Young Tom was a reporter in New York, fair, but not brilliant. He was sent to Washington, where he did good work. Mr. Bennett saw that Connery was not ambitious, believed him to be perfectly loyal to the Herald and made him managing editor. Many people think that a managing editor manages the editor. Such is not the case in the Herald office. When Mr. Bennett is in town everybody and everything are kept in a state of lively commotion and the shaking-up process is continually in operation. Mr. Connery manages downwards, but he cannot control his associates.

For instance, he can direct the city editor to make much or little of any special topic. He can instruct correspondents to take this or that cue. His advice would have a degree of weight with some of the editorial writers, but he cannot control the course of the Herald in any direction. Mr. Chamberlain, known tolerably well as Ivory Chamberlain, was formerly the leading editorial writer on the World. Mr. Bennett offered him a similar position in the Herald office. He sits in the counsel chamber and writes precisely as he pleases. Not that he marks out his programme and necessarily follows it, but having been told by Mr. Bennett the general course to be followed steers the craft as, in his judgment, will most certainly secure its landing in the desired harbor. Mr. Connery would no more think of altering or leaving out Chamberlain's leaders than of interfering with Bennett's draft on the cashier.

I have spoken of Mr. Chamberlain as chief editorial writer. He is reputed to receive $5,000 a year, and is looked to for a solid and substantial column every day. He deals with European and national politics. A very useful man in this department is Douglass Levien. I think he is English born, though he may be Irish. His forte is local politics. He was a favorite with the elder Bennett and with Fredric Hudson, the great managing editor who resigned to make way for the young man and accepted a pension of $10,000 a year until he was run over by a locomotive near Concord. Levien used to make his headquarters in Albany. He was intimate with Tweed, Sweeny, Connolly and Hall, and knew all their little games, politically speaking. He writes well. Dr. Hosmer is another valued writer. He deals with continental matters very intelligently. He and Dr. Wallis occupy a room with Levien. Mr. Nordhoff writes political editorials in Washington. Mr. Bennett avails himself frequently of outside experts, and discusses special topics in that way, paying liberally for the assistance.

Capt. H. Coffill, who was cured of Consumption in 1869 by Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites persuaded me to try the Syrup for Bronchitis, from which I had suffered much. I used only three bottles, and my health is now better than it has been for years.

Republicanism, pure and simple, is a power in the land. It has ruled the nation for 20 years, and it will retain its power in the government and in the hearts of the people if the party maintains a bold and independent attitude. "Entangling alliances" with conciliated Greeks, or apocryphal civil service reformers, or greenback dreamers, or Paris communists, will only serve to weaken and destroy the Republican organization. There is only one course to pursue, and that is the one in which Iowa leads the van.

DR. PAUL M. BRENAN.

His Wonderful Success
IN THE TREATMENT OF ALL
Chronic and Difficult Diseases.

He has astonished the People of this Coast by his skillful Operations.

HE HAS TAUGHT IN HIS

public and private lectures the true principles of health and life to both male and female. He has also warned them against habits that would be likely to produce disease, in plain and comprehensive language. But where he has found them crushed and broken down by disease, mentally and physically, he has restored them to health and happiness, for it is well understood that without health there can be no happiness.

has made a specialty in the treatment of the following diseases: Catarrh, Bronchitis, and all diseases of the throat and chest, by an entirely new system only known to himself. Diseases of the Kidneys and Urinary Organs, including Spermatorrhea, Seminal Weakness or premature loss of Manhood. In the treatment of these diseases he has made a world wide reputation by his astonishing success, not only on this Coast but throughout the whole United States. Diseases of the stomach, bowels, liver and kidneys as well as all diseases of the blood and skin he has become master of, and never fails to give relief at once, and permanently cures the case if he is applied to in time.

THE DOCTOR HAS GIVEN SPECIAL LECTURES

to ladies only for years and is perfectly familiar with all female complaints, and understands their delicate and refined organization, as well as the proper remedies which should be used to allay their suffering and restore them to perfect health.

THE DOCTOR HAS THIS ADVANTAGE

over most physicians—he can tell the patients' disease the moment he comes in contact with them without any aid from the individual. This accounts in part for this great professional success.

All surgical operations can be performed by his skillful hand, and the patient need not fear the result.

will send to those living at a distance and who cannot well visit his office a list of Printed Questions and by the answers when filled out he can tell the disease as well as the proper treatment almost as well as seeing the patient personally, and will forward the proper medicines, or instruments, to any part of the country with full instructions and advice. Each letter requiring advice or list of questions, must contain two postage stamps.

Everything strictly confidential and honorable.

THE DOCTOR

has studied in the best Medical Schools in Europe and three years in the Jefferson Medical College at Philadelphia, as more than one of the Medical men of the Medical Faculty in this State can testify.

CAUTION.

Persons coming to Portland, requiring medical treatment of the proper kind, who desire to consult with me, will please beware of persons who may try to coax them away to other so-called Doctors, through pretended friendship for the patients. Look out for them; they are knaves, prompted by selfish motives and what they can make. Be sure and ask for DR. PAUL M. BRENAN, the Medical Lecturer, and read his sign on his door.

SATURDAY MORNING, JUNE 1 1878

OVERWHELMING EXPOSURE

The conspiracy entered into by Jacobs and Mitchell to deceive the people of Oregon on the eve of an important election has failed Dispatches which we print in another place show absolutely that Jacobs misrepresented the letter of President Wright Capt Ainsworth who was present at the meeting of the board of directors in New York and heard the expression of all the directors against the senate bill including the statement by the president himself was so far concerned that Jacobs had misstated the purport of Wright's letter that he telegraphed to Wright on the subject and received the answer elsewhere printed This leaves Jacobs in a very pitiable plight It is an exposure from which any man with even ordinary sensibility would shrink Jacobs' object is apparent He voluntarily stepped forward to misrepresent an important matter in the hope of deceiving the people of Oregon believing that the truth could not be known till after Monday's election With this view he did not scruple to falsify a letter hoping to make it appear that the Northern Pacific Railroad company would accept without amendment the abortive bill which has been passed through the senate This was intended as a vindication of Mitchell to the people of Oregon Jacobs telegraphed in substance that Wright had written him that he and his company wanted the senate bill passed and urging Jacobs to aid its passage through the house Wright states that he wrote Jacobs, presenting the objections of the company to the senate bill stating that those objections could be remedied in the house, and urging Jacobs to lend his efforts to secure a bill which would enable the company to push forward the great work It turns out just as we supposed or rather foreknew The company do not intend to accept the bill in its present shape because it would be useless to them and to the country Wright stated to Jacobs the objections of the company to the bill and urged him to assist in removing them Jacobs perverted the whole purport of the letter by telegraphing that Wright had written him that the company was not opposed to the senate bill and pressing Jacobs to help put it through the house If there could be a more dishonorable trick than this species of falsification the standard ethical writers have not yet heard of it Jacobs has won distinction But it is a distinction which contributes additional material to his utter condemnation

Mitchell and Jacobs by their course on this subject have admitted the importance and even the necessity of passing such bill as the company will accept What they have tried to do is to force a belief that the company will accept this bill and can build the road under it, neither of which things is fact To be of any use to the company and the country the bill must be put in very different form It is Mitchell and Jacobs who as Billings states in his telegram and as the people of Oregon and Washington know have prevented the passage of a proper bill It is their hostility to this great enterprise and their unfaithfulness to the people of the northwest which have put back this national work There is delay of a year at least and danger of utter failure at last solely in consequence of their action It is the result wanted by the great monopoly of the Union and Central Pacific The effort is continued to force the passage of a bill that will construct no road and a trick for the election is the falsehood that the company will accept this bill and want it passed by the house But the trick is frustrated Fertile as he is in expedients Mitchell has here missed the mark Jacobs has utterly dishonored himself by setting his name to an attempt at the meanest kind of deception It is an attempt which, with its consequent exposure is a fit culmination of the whole scheme of betrayal The fraudulent pretense of an effort to get a railroad, while all the time throwing every possible obstruction in the way of it could not end more fittingly If anything more was needed to prove the utter insincerity of the whole business exposure of this most dishonest trick will most fully and most happily kill the bill

CHEAP TRANSPORTATION

To transport a bushel of corn from the Mississippi river to New York a few years ago required that three other bushels be sent along to pay the freight Then, when wheat sold at $1 50 a bushel in Liverpool the cost of transportation left for the producer no compensation In contrast with this the Chicago Tribune presents the facts as to transportation of grain at the present time Through rates by lake and canal from that city to New York are seven cents for corn and eight cents for wheat By lake and rail rates are given at nine and a half cents for corn to New York and eleven cents to Boston All rail freights are about twenty cents per hundred pounds on grain to New York eighteen cents to Philadelphia and seventeen to Baltimore So great a revolution in transportation charges has developed the agricultural interest in the upper Mississippi valley to a degree of which a few years ago no one could have dreamed The fruits are witnessed in the enormous increase of aggregate wealth and prosperity throughout that large section of country It is the improvement and growth of water transportation which have created this revolution The Tribune says it is considered that the Erie canal must become a free highway—as free as the lakes and the ocean Within a brief period there will be a free highway from Chicago to Montreal and Quebec for vessels of the largest carrying capacity The lakes and the St Lawrence canals will offer unlimited means of reaching the Atlantic and will be comparatively free from tolls In winter when the lakes are closed the Mississippi river will offer free navigation to New Orleans The rates of transportation by water on the lakes will never probably rise above what they are now Indeed so great will be the reduction when the Canadian canals are opened that it is questionable whether the free Erie canal will be able to maintain more than a local traffic Rates by water therefore will be reduced still below present figures This fact will have an important bearing on the business and financial standing of the railroads And now it is a curious fact that the bankrupt roads are getting on better than the solvent ones Railroads says the Tribune which are declared insolvent and are managed by receivers are free of the obligation to pay interest on any debts dividends on stock and salaries to expensive corps of officers The receiver has the road and all its property complete and all he has to do is to make it yield enough to keep it in repair keep the rolling stock in good condition and supply pay the wages of the workmen needed to operate the road and pay his own fees Necessarily he can operate a road much cheaper than can a president and board of directors having to meet interest on any number of millions of bonds and pay dividends on an equal number of millions of stocks and support an army of officials who render no service and furnish living to parasites of every imaginable kind The general rates of transportation at present are on the basis of operating railroads by the inexpensive machinery of receivers and not upon the basis of operating magnificent and costly corporations Thus the bankruptcy of the railways is a source of profit to agriculture yet it is not likely to be argument for construction of more railways But there is assurance that there can never be a return to the old scale of transportation charges because water transportation must always remain the great controlling and regulating power for that vast agricultural region These facts have important bearing on our situation here A railway along the Columbia river will meet a great want if an eastern connection be made but minimum rates of transportation will not be secured except through free navigation of the river This can be brought about only by construction of locks at the Cascades and Dalles

THE PRESENT SITUATION

We ask in all soberness do men who own real estate in Portland realize that when the Northern Pacific Company begin construction of the section of the road from the Columbia river eastward property in this city will advance twenty five or fifty per cent Do merchants realize that business will expand vastly in every direction Do working men understand that labor of all kinds will be in demand at remunerative prices Do our manufacturers see that a new and wide market for their productions will be opened at our very door Can not we all see that amid the energy and enterprise born of such an undertaking there will be a chance for all and triumph for many and that what is required is something to lift us out of our isolation and connect us with the people and wealth of the east? Is it not apparent that the only company who have any interest in affording us railroad connections is the Northern Pacific Is there any other company or are there any other men having capital at command who have manifested any desire to come under any circumstances to our relief? If not our only hope is in the Northern Pacific They are asking only what is fair, what will do no injury and will be of great benefit No voice is raised against us in the north, south east or west except by a senator from Oregon who is afraid we shall be crushed by the insatiate greed of corporate power One man unfortunately for Oregon has occupied too high a position as chairman of the committee on railroads and the one and only hope of relief to us has been mercilessly crushed directly in the face of our interests as expressed by our board of trade and the general voice of the people of Oregon The people of Multnomah county will have an opportunity on Monday of rendering a verdict upon a ticket which was surreptitiously imposed on the Republican party, but represents only the personal interest of political managers

Moncure Conway writes from London to the Cincinnati Commercial that the war feeling against Russia is got up by the tories and the mob that not only are the intellectual leaders of the country against war not only are the great mercantile classes against it but that never in all history has the tory party been so divided as on this question and that a very strong conservative government could be formed to morrow out of veterans of that party who have not only withdrawn from Lord Beaconsfield's leadership but are opposing him more vehemently than the timorous habitues of the Reform Club Of the class with which Mr Conway most mingles he says "The horror with which the prospect of war fills the scientific and literary circles of the country is inexpressible It availed to cast a gloom even over the great May soiree of the Royal Society on Wednesday evening last The attractions were unusually great but most of the groups turned from the scientific novelties to discuss the all absorbing theme and many gave vent to their indignation in language rarely heard in the serene Valhalla of Burlington House

Great numbers of Republicans in this county intend to vote the Independent ticket in order to emphasize their protest against personal politics and to let the managers of such system know that they are not the owners of the free voters of the county A ticket put up in the interest of office holding and office getting, and supported by the official class with almost desperate energy as if their salvation depended on it does not attract the support of the other class who do not like to see this influence the dominant one in political affairs The independent movement is notice to those who think if they can manage to control party organization the mass of citizens may be coerced in the name of party that the supposition is a delusion The Republican party is not the property of a set of men who are seeking their own interest

Sagacious politicians among the Republicans argue that good results to their party will come from the Florida and Louisiana investigating measure started by the Democrats in congress The party will be drawn by natural sympathy more closely together and the president having the cold shoulder shown him of those he has been trying all along to conciliate will be inclined quite naturally to fall back again into the fold from which he has wandered, but to which by election as our Presbyterian friends would say he legitimately belongs

One object of the redistricting scheme in Ohio is said to have been [illegible] General Garfield To accomplish this the county he was understood to live in was put into a district with three Democratic counties Now it is discovered that he lives somewhere else and is really unharmed to the intense disgust of the Democracy

Everybody knows that the Pacific Mills of Lawrence Mass are the largest manufacturing corporations of America but many are not aware how vast the establishment is Its eleven mills and buildings [illegible] acres of flooring and give employment to over [illegible] hands It runs [illegible] worsted spindles and [illegible] looms They use 110,000 pounds of cotton and [illegible] pounds of cotton wool per week, printing and dyeing in that time upward of 1,000,000 yards [illegible] of the mills is [illegible] by fifty steam boilers thirty seven steam engines and eleven turbine water wheels

It is stated in a Washington journal that the Potter investigation here will come to nothing The design of it is generally understood to be the creation of a partisan scandal for the purpose of martyrizing Tilden and furnishing campaign capital

A Washington dispatch says that almost eight thousand bills have been presented in congress at the present session We are surprised that the number is so small An Oregon senator must have introduced nearly that many himself

It will strike the average mind that nobody except a played out politician could afford the exposure which Jacobs has provided

ALL FOR LOVE'S SAKE.—All who have read Mark Twain's inimitable story of boyhood Tom Sawyer have doubtless, experienced a union of feeling in accord with Tom's, who when in love with Becker went daily in the neighborhood of her parent's residence and engaged himself in playing ball in order to prove to her the sincerity of his affection A case nearly similar to Tom's is occurring almost nightly here in Portland in the vicinity of — street The several young ladies who are noted lately handsome and bewitching since their arrival in this city, they have caused havoc in the hearts of the nice boys a number many devotees who eagerly anticipate their slightest wish so as to gain an approbation smile Some of the lads hearing the young ladies announce their pleasure in witnessing athletic feats have betaken themselves to playing games of catch ball nearly every evening upon a vacant park block which fronts the residence of their jewels. To an innocent observer it is amusing to view the various scientific maneuvers performed by the love sick crew—each desiring to surpass his rival in dexterity They pay very little attention to the ball at times, and manage to throw it into the yard and when in pursuit of the petticory glances thrown at the windows in hopes of receiving an invitation to come are agonizing This performance has been undergoing repitition for some time but their efforts have proved unsuccessful Alas alas love is a terrible thing, but the cure is bitterer still

DIPHTHERIA.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE OREGONIAN

As you give a prominent place in your columns to lay to a prescription for diphtheria from Mrs [illegible] of Marysville I trust you will give a fresh lent and just chance I first let me review her prescription [illegible] I had a number of cases [illegible] I have most physicians and I know one who had [illegible] cases of which only [illegible] were malignant The [illegible] would probably have recovered under any [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

[illegible]

My prescription for diphtheria is Simon pure in the public treatment If there are no physicians at hand get a few medical cases and treat them [illegible] better than most of the Allopathic The board of health report from Philadelphia New ark New York Brooklyn and Boston [illegible] show [illegible] deaths of which [illegible] are credited [illegible] to each Allopathic [illegible] In diphtheria the [illegible] [illegible] the others [illegible] The physicians referred [illegible] [illegible] In the absence of [illegible] cold water cloths about the neck and frequent bathing—whether [illegible] or not are generally acceptable and beneficial To neutralize the offensive odor permanganate of potash is much better than the chlorate Probably Belladonna and Mercurius have cured more cases than any other remedies and if you cannot get a physician give them But there are many cases which they will not reach as epidemics vary from year to year

Treatment of Chronic Diseases

Dr P J Price office and residence corner Third and Alder pays special attention to the treatment of chronic diseases particularly those of a delicate complicated or obstinate nature As a practitioner Dr Price has been eminently successful and should be consulted by all who are suffering from lingering diseases His diploma and testimonials are open for inspection

An Astonishing Fact

A large proportion of the American people are to day living from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism take the advice of druggists and your friends and try one bottle of Green's August Flower Your speedy relief is certain Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues with satisfactory result in every case You can buy a sample bottle for 10 cents to try Three doses will relieve the worst case Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent

A FIERY STEED

(From Harper's Weekly

For once May gave promise of being a M y worthy of the many beautiful songs which have been sung in her praise She came dancing along after her sister April—who had just left in a shower of tears—with a bright smile upon her lips, and a wondrous rainbow halo about her head

The young maples began to blush in happy consciousness of her approach and the delicate pink and white blossoms on the orchard trees opened their dainty leaves and shyly flung a welcoming fragrance on the soft clear air

All through the fields and meadows the vales and woodlands and over the hills ran the violets and trailing arbutus and May buds and daisies and their sister flowers telling the glad tidings of sunny days and moonlit nights and lovely butterflies and sparkling rain drops and busy humming bees and the birds swinging on slender green boughs sang in sweet twittering notes to each other

Neighbor, soon we shall see the roses

Along a pleasant winding lonely country road with splendid great apple and pear trees standing on either side and the spring flowers dotting the green carpet so thickly that the green is almost hidden comes slowly on this poetic May day a diminutive old odd looking white horse, drawing a small market wagon filled with household furniture accompanied by an enormous shaggy Newfoundland dog and as pretty a country maid as ever milked a cow or made a pat of golden butter

The broad brimmed straw hat she wears shades a low brow to which clings babyish rings of hair the color of the glossy, satin-smooth buttercups a pair of innocently roguish eyes cheeks brown with a tinge under tinge of rose, a charming red-lipped mouth, and a firm round chin

Across the brow however at this moment flits the shadow of a frown and a look of comic perplexity comes into the sweet young face The odd looking horse has stopped in the middle of the road and remains perfectly motionless staring directly before him save when he bends his head to take a nibble at the flower thick grass as though suddenly oblivious of everything under the sun except the tranquillity of the June like May afternoon

"Oh Charley! Charley go on—do!—that's a dear!" coaxes the young girl coming to his side and gently patting his head with her little brown ungloved hand but Charley merely whisks a too familiar fly away with his forlorn old tail and makes no further sign

Charley, good horse Charley—oh! why didn't I bring some carrots with me? Charley you bad, bad fellow, if you don't go on I'll whip you as sure as you stand there Come, be a darling And thus she alternately begs and threatens Lion assisting in dog language, with an occasional dash at the heels of his obstinate equine friend, but Charley refuses to be a darling plants his feet more firmly than ever and never stirs, and at last with an air of resignation, she goes back to the path seats herself on a rude seat formed by nature of the gnarled roots of a misshapen old tree and waits patiently for at least ten minutes At the end of this time Charley looks about with a just waked up expression in his eyes as who should say "Dear, dear, I quite forgot there was work to be done," and starts off with quick steps that gradually become slower and slower

With a sigh of relief the young girl arises and follows—Lion bounding back from the wood where he has been making hasty explorations, having it is in his mind that his mistress if not to be left without his protection for more than two minutes at a time takes his place at her side—and the perplexed look fades away into a smile that brings to light two rows of pearl white teeth

But alas the smile is premature In another ten minutes, again overcome by the beauty and peacefulness of the day Charley falls into a reverie stops once more and once more refuses most decidedly to go on

And in this manner does that dreadful horse behave for a whole hour making short progresses and long pauses, until finally coming to the conclusion that there had been quite enough of this sort of thing, he deliberately drags the wagon to the side of the road takes up his station beneath a wide spreading oak and proceeds to munch the young grass at his feet with a look in his eyes that says as plainly as words, "From this spot move me if you can"

Oh Charley! Charley! how can you begins the young girl loudly and mournfully following him with small brown hands clasped beseechingly. Oh, you wicked wicked Charley!

Did you call me?" asks a masculine voice, to her great astonishment and as with a slight start she turns in the direction of the voice she sees a young man walking rapidly toward her the sound of his approaching footsteps having been completely lost in the inquiring bow wows of her canine guardian. "Did you call me?" he repeats

No sir she replies blushing prettily and looking at him with frank, child like eyes I was speaking to the horse But still I am"

Beg pardon I thought for an instant you were speaking to me It seems I have the honor of being a namesake of your fiery steed But you are in trouble What is the matter? Can I help you in any way?

There's nothing very serious the matter she says, with a smile We are moving to day, and father went on ahead a long while ago having some business to settle with our new landlord and he must be at this very moment waiting for me at the new house, and wondering what in the world has become of me You see we have no boys in our family and the other girls are younger than myself, and father and mother both thought—this being a very quiet road—that Lion and I could look after Charley and the furniture but Charley, who generally behaves very well, has been awfully contrary and has stopped every few moments, two hours on a journey that should have taken us but one and there's just as long a distance to go yet and with Charley—oh you wicked horse!—standing under that tree I don't know how we are ever to get to George town"

Its almost as bad a plight as the old woman was in with her pig when he wouldn't go under the stile, and she was afraid she couldn't get home that night laughs the young man—a nice looking fellow he is with gentleman stamped on every feature of his handsome face But suppose I cut you a switch? Perhaps that used with discretion might have some influence on the fiery steed

Oh no that would never do she says shaking her head emphatically Charley was [illegible] whipped in his life He'd be so tired at the very sight of a switch that I believe he'd run away

Would not that be a desirable thing under the circumstances asks the young man with a [illegible] at the [illegible] horse [illegible] running away [illegible]

[illegible]

Charley turned his head toward the [illegible] and went [illegible]

Well the [illegible] his young mistress

And now with your permission I'll [illegible] with you to the [illegible] Charley will not [illegible]

Oh no indeed! You must not says the pretty country maid You were going in an entirely different direction I could not think of taking you so far out of your way Many thanks for your kind offer but indeed I—Now! Won't you Charley [illegible]

Good heavens! I never knew my name was so musical before thinks the young man and then explains I was going in an entirely different direction because I missed my train at the last station and if I had waited would have had to wait two hours for another but being rather impatient by nature and tempted by the fine day I set out to walk my destination being the next village And now if I return with you I shall have a much pleasanter walk catch the next train and lose no time after all Lion approves of my plan Don't you Lion And Lion usually very suspicious of strangers comes and lays his startling cold nose in his new friend's hand

And so the two young people walked along, side by side crushing the pretty flowers under their feet as they go and Charley [illegible] back every now and then out of the corner of his right eye to see if the mischievous voice is still there never falters but keeps [illegible] on his winding way After a few moments silence the innocent little maid raises her blue eyes—they have been hidden by the long lashes—and says in a shy voice

You said you were going to Daisyville I have lived there all my life

Not a very long time said the young man with a smile

Seventeen years I was born in the little straw [illegible] farm house we are leaving now And a tear trembles on the long lashes and rolls down the round rosy cheek

The young man looks at the tear with pitying wonder

And were you very happy there he asks

So happy replies the girl, that we fear we never will be as happy anywhere else And—a sudden light breaks over her face —I believe that is what ails Charley He knows it isn't right that we should be going to a strange place and does his best poor fellow to prevent our going

Undoubtedly gravely assents her companion But why if you will permit me to ask are you bidding farewell to Daisyville? —Giddap Charley, as Charley evinces a desire to listen to the conversation

Father didn't own the place He had it on a long lease which ran out the very week (a month ago) our old landlady died and her heir—a nephew and his mother are coming to take possession of the estate and they want our farm house for their gardener When Mrs Marks was alive her gardener had rooms over the stable and very comfortable rooms they were, too and the kitchen garden was just back of the big house But I suppose the new people are more stylish than the old ones and want their kitchen garden larger and farther away than Mrs Marks was and so they take from us our home and we were obliged to move to Grasstown

And are your father and mother as much attached to Daisyville as you and your sisters are he asks

"Even more attached to it she answers "if that be possible It almost breaks my heart to see mother's sad face But I must try to make the new home as bright for them as I can—that is, if ever I get there Oh dear how very unfortunate that Charley should have taken it into his head to be so naughty this day of all others!"

"On the contrary I think Miss Gray —it has transpired that her name is Bessie Gray— that it is the most fortunate thing that could have happened"

Her blue eyes and red mouth open in wonder

"Because," he answered "if Charley had behaved well instead of badly, you would have been at Grasstown long before this and I should not have had the pleasure of meeting you And now I am about proposing something which will seem extremely absurd to you, although in reality the wisest thing that could be done under the circumstances Suppose we turn Charley's head in the direction of his old home and see what speed he will make then

But looking at him half frightened as Lion bounds forward with a loud joyful bark to meet a stalwart old man who comes suddenly around a corner his hat in one hand and a red silk handkerchief in the other and who shouts the moment he catches sight of her

Why girl where have you been? What on earth's the matter?

Bessie leaves unfinished the "But begun [illegible] runs laughingly to meet him and taking the hat from his hand [illegible] while she explains, Charley was the matter father You can't think how aggravating he's been He wouldn't go until this gentleman—with another pretty blush —was kind enough to make him go

The old man looked keenly at the young one And pray where did you come from and who may you be? he asked sharply

"I will tell you where I came from and how I happened to meet your daughter at some future time Meanwhile you will learn from this who I am —handing a card to the old farmer, on which was engraved, Charles Marks Jr"

Our old landlady's nephew and heir?

The same, at your service and having no desire in spite of my agent's arrangements to the contrary to begin my life in Daisyville by turning so worthy a tenant (in his heart he added with so pretty a daughter) out of the home he has occupied so many years I was just proposing to Miss Gray as you made your appearance that Charley should be stopped in his mad career and once and for all be turned toward his old home"

Are you quite in earnest sir?

Never more so in my life Whoa Charley [illegible] old boy and around went horse and wagon, and off started the fiery steed so fast that they could no longer follow him, Lion, leaping a yard in air in the exuberance of his delight galloping by his side

He's all right said the old man his face beaming with happiness And won't mother look wonderfully surprised when she sees him coming up the lane? I don't know how to thank you sir

Don't thank me I deserve no thanks says Charles Marks holding aside a low hanging tree branch that Bessie may pass under

And the new gardener? asked Bessie, looking back at him

Will have the rooms over the stable You know you said they were very comfortable

But your train persists Bessie with the first gleam of coquetry that ever sparkled in her blue eyes

"I'd much rather walk" says Mr Marks

When next the blossoms are on the orchard trees and the spring flowers are running wild through the grass there is a new mistress at the big house in Daisyville a pretty little thing with lovely blue eyes bright golden hair and a sweet [illegible] Her name is [illegible] and [illegible] her husband [illegible] as it may appear the beloved of [illegible]

And in the stable as well [illegible] better [illegible]

DOHERTY

[illegible]

[illegible]

Did you ever see our books? No? Just you look her off [illegible] Well [illegible] in December In the month of December [illegible] had in this one station two thousand [illegible] Irelanders women [illegible] All drunk But most of them are vagrants in the winter time You see it was pretty cold last December especially nights And then we're careful about our officers Don't allow them at the no more swearing at em than circumstances require I use Irish for [illegible] such things among themselves They have a fancy for this station maybe I don't know how that is We mean to be humane on this corps That's our theory Some of our officers have a very gentlemanly way Not that we think it makes much difference I tell you madam (you may better understand it at the outset) I don't know what your intentions are, of course but ladies come with so many charitable and curious designs which it seems a pity to disappoint but I tell you the folks that get into these places are a hopeless lot They're folks without a chance Most of us have a chance I reckon in this world some time or nother even them poor devils By the time they get here the chance is as dead as John Brown's body I don't say there's never an exception Now there was that creetur last night Maybe if somebody'd taken her in hand several years ago—a lady with the way you seem to have (I hope you'll excuse me ma'am but there's a difference in a lady's way such as I think you'd have to be a man and to be pretty roughly [illegible] work like mine for instance to understand so clearly as you might) I wished I [illegible] I will confess [illegible] It did occur to me to get home for my wife But I never bring my wife into the station house

Here's the entry—the last one I mean See D—Doherty Ellen February 21 1877 Vagrancy When I get time I'm going to count up how often that woman's name has been on these books But it would take a good deal of time It's nine years

From after very well the first time she came Don't know how it happen to There's such a lot of young girls! And pretty ones too This one was more than common good looking—an Irish girl She had a [illegible] style and was paler than most of em I think it must have been five years ago It was the first time she ever been arrested She took on dreadfully about it She hadn't begun to drink then And what she was taken up for had never happened before It was the first time she said Somehow I remember I believed her Seemed as if she'd break her heart Hadn't any folks she said Hers were dead She cooped up in a little heap in a corner on the floor that night and sat crying all the night It wasn't till nigh morning that the other women could get a word out of her If I remember straight we had an uncommonly rough lot of women folks on that night I wouldn't have put her in among em but there's no other way I never get quite used to that—shutting up a young thing with an old one

Well so she was sent to the house for thirty days and by and by she was back again She came of her own accord that time Said she couldn't get anything to do Seems to me she said she wanted honest work They do say it once in a while And it was a pretty cold night She came for a place to sleep So after that we got pretty well used to her but mostly after she begun to drink and after like the rest It don't take long Their own mothers wouldn't know em mostly in three years or so Less maybe as it happens

Well yes Our rule is Come a fortnight and you go When one comes steady for two weeks every night then it's a case of vagrancy and we can send em to the alms house But Doherty she was pretty careful She grew smart as she grew worse If she got taken it wasn't for a long pull Never knew her in the house at the longest more than three months at a time And when she came to lodge she steered pretty clear of the law—coming for a few nights, you see and then off again on her own ways There were more afraid of the almshouse than they are of hell these folks

So she got to be a pretty old customer always come to this station I don't know but that was my fault Once I give her a pair of my wife's shoes It was one January morning, twelve below zero She hadn't any stockings only a pair of old rubbers, and her bare feet came through on the pavement and it was pretty icy I suppose I might have lost my place for it Eh Cap'n? But I don't think Doherty ever told of me

She grew to be a pretty tough case Doherty did And yet there was always something I liked about Doherty You see she used to sing Sometimes they do And once or twice I've had a chap here who could draw portraits of the rest Scrawl the walls all over if he wasn't watched One of the worst cases we ever had on these books his name was Gaffrey—Peter Gaffrey Killed an officer finally with a horseshoe He used to talk Latin when he was drunk and some other language I thought it was Dutch but the chief heard him and said he guessed it was Greek The fellow used to get the rest all ranged round like an audience and then go at it But generally they talk religion It's more popular This Doherty that I speak of she had a beautiful voice Time and again I've set up here looking over the books at dead of night alone along with an officer or so and heard the call go up from a man somewhere down below

Doherty! Sing us to sleep Doherty Sing us to sleep!

And then Doherty from the women's cell would hear them through the wall, and she'd begin And the fighting and the swearing and all the horrid noise would quiet down and true enough I think they slept I had a Newfoundland dog that went to sleep when my wife played the cabinet organ Sometimes that woman would sing enough to make your flesh creep She'd lost all her looks by that time But she never sang so when she was sober And sometimes she'd strike up a pretty thing a clean and sweet as the hush-a-by my own baby hears, ma'am, from my own wife's lips Sometimes she sang Auld Lang Syne or Home Sweet Home and once that woman picked up a song called the Three Fishers Maybe you know it You could hear her all over this great building

For men must work and women must weep,
—And women must weep

Don't you ever sing any hymns Doherty I says to her one night—more to see what she would say you know But she looked at me and made me no answer and passed on Doherty never quite lost her ways like other women when she was herself Sometimes she was quite manageable and quiet in her ways That night she didn't sing at all The men kept it up off and on all night Isn't Doherty in to night Hasn't Doherty [illegible] Sing us to sleep Doherty sing us to sleep

But she [illegible] her lips and when morning came it was a snowy morning I [illegible] tugged a little this way on my [illegible] a lady She didn't [illegible] while [illegible]

This winter she [illegible] pretty often In December [illegible] [illegible] interest [illegible] book [illegible] [illegible] Nothing whatever I [illegible] care help [illegible]

Now last night [illegible] woman she'd just [illegible] [illegible] when we saw her sing [illegible] He said [illegible] this time And I said Here again Doherty

I went up to speak to her for I felt a little sorry to think that it was the last time For you couldn't understand how familiar their faces grow or the kind of feeling that an officer gets about them now and then

There is the entry just as I put it down fifty or sixty times

"No 15 she came in rather early)—No 31, D Dougherty Ellen Vagrancy Sick For we saw at once that she was pretty sick She'd been beating about in the storm The snow was all over her I noticed that she had on a clean calico dress She stood just where you're standing ma'am while I made the entry It took the snow some time to melt for it had sleeted some She looked almost as if she was in a white dress she was so covered She had her hair done up neat too

I thought I'd go and see her in the cell myself So I went down She walked very slow and seemed weak

Tired Doherty? said I

Lieutenant said she folks used to call me Nell Nobody called me Doherty till I begun to come to the police station I don't think anybody called me that till I'd been into the house says she

Then I said I'd call her Nell [illegible] Are you sick to night Nell

Oh my God says she just like that Then she threw up her arms over her head and began to sob and take on But he didn't swear She felt too sick I take it So we put her in with the rest and she got into the corner and sat crying

It was not till toward midnight that she began They didn't get well and quieted before that But every now and then the men would call Sing us to sleep Doherty! Where is Doherty Doherty sing us to sleep!

It's been a set in hard toward midnight It beats fury here upon the other windows as you see ma'am and we get a pretty clean sweep of the wind on account of the street running to the wharves I sent down once to ask how Doherty seemed but the officer reported that she was quiet and he wished the rest were They'd all set in then and women he set in concert a crying out Sing us to sleep Doherty

Pretty soon she began I could hear her plain above the roaring of the storm She began—Doherty began—that—that poor—miserable—creetur —she that had once been a woman like other women folks—excuse me ma'am but she'd been on our books a good many years And I've heard her sing such things I never looked to be taken by surprise by Doherty took me You're not surprised very easy in such a place as this at anything your fellow sinners do

But about midnight when the storm was at its thick and the cells were growing still Doherty she sat up and begun to sing a hymn She sang

Shall we gather at the river

My boy sings that at a Sunday school and my wife she strikes it up the first thing on the cabinet organ every Sunday night Doherty sang it all through

At the margin of the river
Washing up its silver spray,
We shall walk and worship ever,
All the happy golden day

Those are the words I thought, perhaps you wouldn't know them Folks sing them a great deal in the Baptist church

Before you could have cocked a pistol it was as quiet as the grave all through this place The officers looked at one another All the men waked up The women, they got together in a heap about her The Captain said to me Doherty's singing hymn tunes I said I thought we'd go down and see and down we went

When we looked in at the grating I wish my you could have seen those men—ragged tough drunk some of em taken in awful crimes No I don't wish you had seen them But there they set as still as a row of angels on the Judgment day, a listening to hear that woman One and another they said Hush! hush! And one fellow said I used to sing that song myself He was up for assault and battery Badly beaten too himself, about the face He crept along the wall I noticed on his knees to get where he could hear her better When she stopped he hollered out

Give us some more Dougherty

And the rest said

Doherty give us another psalm tune

But one of the women said

"Come, Nell Sing us to sleep with the hymns

So then she began again and she gave it to em one upon another, loud and clear Heaven knows where the creetur learned em At some Protestant Sunday school maybe, where she'd wandered in at holidays They go a good deal on a count of the Christmas presents

We all got around her there the men in [illegible] and the cells [illegible] And [illegible] I [illegible] while [illegible] [illegible] Doherty [illegible] [illegible] spectator [illegible]

So there she sat and sung She set up in one corner with her chin upon her hands and [illegible] nobody but stared straight on before her She sang Nearer My God to Thee and Depths of Mercy! and she sung I heard the voice of Jesus say and I love at Home and all those And all the men and all the women listened And I saw the Captain draw his hand across his eyes And I own it was too much for me I will indeed

To see her there [illegible] those holy words so trustfully as you might say ma'am as if she had as much right to em as any body—that—poor wretched—ma'am it was enough to break your heart to hear her I couldn't help remembering how pretty she had been and young and how she took on the first night she came to us

Pretty soon I came away up stairs—for she unmanned me so before the men, and I sat down here and had it out alone But while I was setting here I heard a lull and one of the Irish boys called out

"Give us the one more, Doherty Then yez can take yer sleep yerself!

And then ma'am, she began quite low and in a faint voice and very sweet and she sung

Jesus Lover of my Soul

She sung in this way singing louder now and then

Let me to Thy bosom fly
While the billows near me roll
Hide me O Thou Saviour hide

And in the midst of the verse she stopped The men called to her and the women and the Captain said

Give us the rest Nell

I was rather glad he called her Nell just then [illegible] all [illegible] as I set here [illegible] her side with her face against the [illegible]

TRUE LOVE IN A RUSSIAN PALACE

A correspondent of the London News writes from Fortress Dunaburg, February 17 [illegible] as follows

It is a bright frosty day All the inhabitants of our fortress [illegible] to the [illegible] skating or looking on The military band playing the well known mazurka from the Life of the Czar Numerous couples are scattered on the broad expanse gliding dancing twirling round as dexterously in their skates as if they were satin shoes Ladies in their fur trimmed dresses are here and officers in varied uniforms for besides our fortress officers there are strangers sent from the seat of war to fetch provisions or the army and their divers colored uniforms enliven the scene Look at this handsome pair flying toward with hands interlaced and feet keeping time to the measure of the music The cavalier is a well made good looking Hussar officer and the lady quite a girl still [illegible] and slender as flax she bends slightly [illegible] to the other she round [illegible] weeds swayed to and fro by the wind Her rosy cheeks glow with a deeper red her eyes sparkle with excitement, [illegible] Her long [illegible] turning snake like behind her In her tight fitting sable trimmed velvet dress and turban but she is a [illegible] Russian girl In our little world of Dunaburg she is the queen of beauty From the top of an ice mountain skaters are starting and come down at a terrible pace cleverly [illegible] are being pushed about in sledges children of four and five years old skate to perfection there are even baby novices Our skating ground is a pretty sight surrounded by high walls of snow thickly studded with fir trees from the [illegible] from which hang hundreds of [illegible] lamps that are lighted when there is a soiree with fireworks etc There is a little wood n hut with a stove and a samovar for making tea to keep warm the papas mammas and old people whose skating days are over and whose greatest pleasure is to talk politics while sipping their glass of boiling tea To day they are discussing the [illegible] of their troops being entered Constantinople In the center of a group stands the venerable looking commandant of the fortress with his silver hair and genial face The conversation turns on the 100 Turkish prisoners lately arrived within our walls A quadrille strikes up The commandant's two fair daughters led off the dance they are magnificent skaters Suddenly the crowd of others in the little house makes way for an aide de camp who, entering hurriedly presents a telegram to the commandant His face brightens Here's good news he says the czarevna will be here this evening to meet the czarewich who will arrive at 9 He does not expect her it is to be a surprise! The news spreads quickly from one group of dancers to another Dancing stops as if by magic Every one is delighted The commandant's voice is heard giving orders about the illuminations then bouquets must be got too There's the rub It is no easy matter to get flowers here at a few hours notice, there being but one gardener and he lives miles away [illegible] [illegible] bouquet [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

Across [illegible] [illegible] lights [illegible] as the czarevna steps from the train into the crimson carpet followed by the Grand Duchess Vladimir and her brother Prince of Mecklenburg Schwerin and suite The Russian hymn is played and hurrahs rend the air There is a striking family likeness between the Princess Dagmar and the Princess of Wales though the former is smaller and bright as the glittering snows of her adopted country—every inch a northern star [illegible]

[illegible] I perceive that [illegible] the czarevna [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] husband whom she has not seen for eight weary months She has not much longer to wait all at once he shouting outside begins her face becomes radiant, and wrapping her self in the magnificent rotonde of [illegible] she hurries to the platform amid renewed hurrahs and clamorous cries of joy Her eyes are eagerly fixed on the two red globes of the approaching engine there is a shrill whistle, much puffing of steam, and the train rolls slowly into the station The czarewitch being in the middle part of the train those who are in front the members of the household and suite are the first to recognize the imperial party while he little guessing the surprise in store for him, descends saluting as he passes the long file of soldiers drawn up on the platform Suddenly he sees her then all else is forgotten—the station the soldiers the crowd of people—and the wife is in her husband's arms held in a long embrace Then like a roar of thunder louder than the last burst forth deafening shouts mixed up with the national hymn This unrestrained outburst of affection this love meeting of the imperial pair touched a chord in every heart

ENGLAND'S DANGER

RUSSIAN CRUISERS AT REVEL—[illegible] UNKNOWN DANGER—[illegible] TY VESSELS—ARMAMENTS IN AMERICA.

London Special to the New York Herald A most alarming change has [illegible] in the situation of England in [illegible] All England to day is deeply [illegible] over certain disclosures which have [illegible] hand in relation to Russia's [illegible] reparations The statements published recently in the Telegram relative to the Russian American cruisers, have been more than verified by discoveries of the greatest [illegible] to both to England and to the United States The Cronstadt correspondent of the London Globe now writes to that journal that [illegible] ares that several steamers have been [illegible] chased by the Russian government for [illegible] ing purposes and that these vessels are [illegible] stationed at Revel harbor.

A RUSSIAN SEAPORT.

Revel is a strongly fortified seaport town of Russia and is situated on a bay on the south side of the gulf of Finland, two hundred miles west southwest of St Petersburg. It was formerly the great emporium of the Hanseatic League for the trade with Novgorod. The harbor has of late been greatly improved and the shipping interests of the town are of more than ordinary importance

RUSSIA'S NAVAL STRENGTH.

According to the revelations made by the Globe's correspondent the vessels in question were procured by the Russian government for the purpose of converting them into cruisers and by this means extending the naval strength of Russia unknown to England. Everything relative to these preparations has been carried on with the utmost secrecy and until to day the rumors and statements that have been promulgated about the matter have been either doubted or flatly denied. But the whole truth is now revealed, and denial is no longer possible

LARGE FORCES OF SEAMEN.

The correspondent goes on [illegible] three of the vessels that have been [illegible] left Revel a week ago, and their destination was America The provisions and [illegible] were supplied by American firms. A [illegible] number of seamen were on board, fully armed and equipped. They present [illegible] formidable force, and it is evident they mean business

ELABORATE ARRANGEMENTS.

From the same source it is learned that arrangements that have been made by the Russian government relative to the cruisers are far more complete and elaborate than any one imagined It was generally believed that Russia would not attempt to force [illegible] on the sea, but how wrong was this [illegible] tion is now sufficiently shown.

AN IMMENSE RESERVE.

A still more astounding revelation is to the effect that there is a sufficiently numerous reserve of seamen, under the general command and at the disposal of the Grand Duke Constantine to supply twenty ocean cruisers like those that have already departed for the United States And, furthermore, there is reason to believe that Russia will make the most of her opportunity, by employing not only this immense reserve force, but also additional forces, if necessary. It is said that negotiations are pending between Russia and several steamship owners for the use of many more vessels

ONE WARNING VOICE.

Under these circumstances it is easy to understand that the feeling in London over these revelations is intense. On all sides the subject is being excitedly discussed, and it is believed that the facts thus made known will hasten the war which has been threatening The Globe's correspondent declares that there has not been a single warning voice save one from Cronstadt, to call the attention of England to this Russo-American privateering enterprise, the magnitude of which cannot be overestimated.

ENGLAND'S DANGER.

The correspondent pronounces the [illegible] convoy force of seamen as very able and finely drilled and organized. He [illegible] opinion that if Russia is not balked she will penetrate to the very center of England's shipping and no power will be sufficiently strong to stand in her way. He considers the situation extremely menacing to the English nation He adds that the only effectual way of dealing with the difficulty will be for England to make a grand stroke and smash the privateering movement before it [illegible] larger proportions, thus nipping this enterprise in the bud How this may be safely and surely done is not suggested.

PRUDENCE GRAY

"That's my name for father said there was better barge on the river than the Prudence and if I were called the same he was su there would never be a better girl.

Poor father He was always very fond me, and my [illegible] est remembrances are and having a ride whe sitting on the [illegible] an evening steering th he stood there [illegible] cinnamon red sail fil barge, with the [illegible] and the water foaming at out by the [illegible] on the river t bubbling by us as we [illegible] where the ships lay cl ward the big [illegible] and against the wharve together in [illegible] for others b emptying their [illegible] the seas fore going away across the seas

I used to think our barge which was a ve small billy [illegible] if you know what that is if you don't I must tell you that it is a bar built with [illegible] ends and low bulwark meant for carrying [illegible] rivers built al to be able to go out to sea a little while, ru ging along the coast I used to think o barge, I saw a very large ship to grew old enough to compare it with th that passed us going up or down the rive and then it used to seem to me that it wo be wonderful fine to go on board one o those great ships and go sailing away— away—across the ocean instead of just cons ing along to Sheerness and up the Medway as we used to go year after year, loaded dee down in the water with pottery or hops, even bricks

I can't tell you how my child life slipp away, living with father and mother board that barge in a little bit of a cab with a tiny stove all that I know is tha was very happy and that I never hardly we ashore, and when I did I was frightened a wanted to get back, and at last I seemed have grown all at once into a great girl, a father and I were alone.

Yes, [illegible] mother had left very suddenly and we had been ashore Sheerness father and I and came back fro the funeral and were sitting on the cab hatch before I could believe it was anythin but a terrible dream and that I should wa and find that she was alive once more blithe and cheery as ever, ready to take t tiller or pull a rope, the same as I when father wanted any help

Father was a changed man after that a as a couple of years slipped by, the work the barge fell more and more into my hand and I used to smile to myself as I saw ho big and red a [illegible] rong they had grown father grew quiet and dull day by day, a used to have a stone bottle filled whenev he went ashore and then sat with it in th cabin all alone until I called him to come a help with the sail

Not that I wanted much help for ours only a small barge and once started, with fair wind, I could manage her well enoug while when we had to tack backwards a forwards across the river mouth, I could ways lock the tiller by the rope that hung to the belaying pin and give it a hitch o this side or that side, till I had taken a pu at the sheet and brought the barge round the other tack

I must have passed half my life in tho days leaning against that tiller, with its en carved to look like a great acorn, and th name of the old barge, Prudence, cut deep the side There I'd stand looking out ahe as we glided along over the smooth sea, pas ing a buoy here and a light there, givin other barges and smacks a wide berth, an listening to the strange squealing noise of t gulls as they wheeled and hovered and swe by me, so closely sometimes, that I cou almost have touched them with my hand.

Our barge was well known all about t mouth of the river and far up beyond t bridge, and somehow, I don't know how was, the men on the different boats we pass had always a kind hail or a wave of the han for us, as we glided by, if we were too far for the friendly shout to reach us.

Sometimes I'd run the barge pretty close the great ships or steamers, inward or o ward bound so as to look at the ladies board, not that I cared to do so very ofte because it seemed to make me sad, for faces I looked on seemed to be so different mine that I felt as if I was another kind being, and it used to set me wondering a make me think and at such times I ha leaned against the tiller and dreamed a dreamed in a waking fashion of how I wou like to read and write and work, as I ha seen ladies sitting and reading and worki on the decks of the big ships, under the aw ing and then I had to set my dreams as and have a pull at the sheet or take a reef the sail because the wind freshened and m dreams all passed away

I don't think poor father meant it unkindl but he seemed to grow more and mo broken and helpless every day, and th frightened me and made me work to ke the barge clean and shipshape, lest t owners should come on board and see thin slovenly and fault with father and d miss him and that I knew would break h heart So I worked on and in a dull hea way father used to thank me, and the tim glided on till one day, as we were lying Southend with the sea glassy and n wind enough to fill the sails, I felt my chee begin to burn as I leaned back against t tiller and would not turn my head, becau I could hear a boat being sculled along towar us, and I knew it was coming from the gre leeboard barge lying astern.

He's coming to see father" I said to m self at last, in a choking voice, and as a ha came I was obliged to turn and there stoo up in the little boat he was sculling with oar over the stern John Grove, in his dar trowsers blue Jersey and scarlet cap, and I saw his sunburnt faced and brown ar and hands I felt my heart beating fast, a knew he was not coming to see father, but see me

We had hardly ever spoken, but I ha known John Grove for years now, and w had nodded and waved hands to one anothe often and often as we had passed up a down the river

Heave us a rope, my lass," he said, as came close to And I did it dreamily, a as soon as I had done so I began to pull back, but it was too late. He had hitched round the thwart of his boat, and was up a over the side before I could stir; and then stood looking down upon me, while I fe sometimes hot and sometimes cold as if could not speak

"Do you want to see father?" I said at last "No my lass," he said quietly, "I want see you."

"Me!" I faltered with my face burning. "Yes you my lass," he said, and h handsome brown face lit up and he looke so manly as he laid his hand on my arm

Prudence my gal he said, "we're both young yet for I'm not six and-twenty, but thought it was time I spoke to you"

"Spoke to me" I said, with my face burn me still

Yes my [illegible] spoke to you for we've bee courting now a matter of four years."

Oh John I cried bursting out laughing and feeling more at my ease "why, we' never hardly spoken to one another.

That's nice he said drawing a lon breath Over again

"Over again? What?" I said

"Call me John he replied,

"Well then John I cried hastily

That's right Prudence but, as I was go ing to say, not spoken to one another' Wel how could we? always taking our turns at t tiller as we were? But all the same, my las I've been always courting of you night a day, these four years and looking out a longing for the time when the Prudence woul come in sight and I could give you a hail a get a wave of the hand back."

I could feel the color coming up into m cheeks again as I heard him speak, and kne how anxiously I had looked out for his barg coming up or down the river, and then began wondering what it all meant, and soo

PRUDENCE GRAY.

That's my name, for father said there wasn't a better barge on the river than the Prudence, and if I were called the same he was sure I would never be a better girl.

Poor father! He was always very fond of me, and my earliest remembrances are of sitting on the tiller and having a ride, when he stood there of an evening steering the barge, with the great cinnamon red sail filled by the wind, and the water foaming and gurgling by us as we ran on up the river toward the big city, where the ships lay close together in dock and against the wharves, discharging their loads or waiting for others before going away across the seas.

I used to think our barge, which was a very small billy boy, if you know what that is—if you don't, I must tell you that it is a barge built with rounded ends and low bulwarks, meant for carrying loads up rivers, built as to be able to go out to sea a little while, running along the coast. I used to think our barge, I say, a very, very large ship, till I grew old enough to compare it with those that passed us going up or down the river, and then it used to seem to me that it would be wonderfully fine to go on board one of those great ships and go sailing away—far away—across the ocean, instead of just coasting along to Sheerness and up the Medway, as we used to go year after year, loaded deep down in the water with pottery or hops, or with bricks.

I can't tell you how my child life slipped away, living with father and mother on board that barge, in a little bit of a cabin with a tiny stove; all that I know is that I was very happy, and that I never hardly went ashore, and when I did I was frightened and longed to get back; and at last I seemed to have grown all at once into a great girl, and father and I were alone.

It was quite alone, for mother had left us very suddenly, and we had been ashore at Sheerness, father and I, and came back from the funeral and were sitting on the cabin roof before I could believe it was anything but a terrible dream, and that I should wake and find that she was alive once more, as bright and cheery as ever, ready to take the tiller or pull at a rope, the same as I did when father wanted any help.

Father was a changed man after that, and as a couple of years slipped by, the work on the barge fell more and more into my hands, and I used to smile to myself as I saw how hard and red and strong they had grown. For father grew quiet and dull day by day, and used to have a stone bottle filled whenever he went ashore, and then sit with it in the cabin all alone till I called him to come and help with the sail.

Not that I wanted much help, for ours was only a small barge, and once started, with a fair wind, I could manage her well enough; while, when we had to tack backwards and forwards across the river month, I could always lock the tiller by the rope that hung on the belaying pin, and give it a hitch on one side or that side, till I had taken a pull at the sheet and brought the barge round on the other tack.

I must have passed half my life in those days leaning against that tiller, with its end carved to look like a great acorn, and the name of the old barge, Prudence, cut deep in its side. There I'd stand looking out ahead as we glided along over the smooth sea, passing a buoy here and a light there, giving the barges and smacks a wide berth, and listening to the strange squealing noise of the gulls as they wheeled and hovered and swept by me, so closely, sometimes, that I could almost have touched them with my hand.

Our barge was well known all about the mouth of the river and far up beyond the bridge, and somehow, I don't know how it was, the men on the different boats we passed had always a kind hail or a wave of the hand for us as we glided by, if we were too far off for the friendly shout to reach us.

Sometimes I'd run the barge pretty close to the great ships, or steamers, inward or outward bound, so as to look at the ladies on board; not that I cared to do so very often, because it seemed to make me sad, for the lives I looked on seemed to be so different to mine that I felt as if I was another kind of being, and it used to set me wondering and make me think; and at such times I have leaned against the tiller and dreamed and dreamed in a waking fashion of how I would like to read and write and work, as I had seen ladies sitting and reading and working, on the decks of the big ships, under the awnings; and then I had to set my dreams aside and have a pull at the sheet or take a reef in the sail, because the wind freshened and my dreams all passed away.

I don't think poor father meant it unkindly, but he seemed to grow more and more weak and helpless every day; and this frightened me and made me work to keep the barge clean and shipshape, lest the owners should come on board and see things wrongly, and find fault with father and dismiss him, and that I knew would break his heart. So I worked on, and in a dull heavy way father used to thank me; and the time glided on, till one day, as we were lying off Gravesend, with the sea glassy and not wind enough to fill the sails, I felt my cheeks begin to burn as I leaned back against the tiller, and would not turn my head, because I could hear a boat being sculled along toward me, and I knew it was coming from the great inward barge lying astern.

"He's coming to see father," I said to myself at last, in a choking voice; and as a hail came I was obliged to turn, and there stood up in the little boat he was sculling with an oar over the stern John Grove, in his dark trousers, blue Jersey and scarlet cap; and as I saw his sunburnt faced and brown arms and hands I felt my heart beating fast, and knew he was not coming to see father, but to see me.

"Spoke to me?" I said, with my face burning still.

"Yes, my lass, spoke to you, for we've been courting now a matter of four years."

"Oh, John," I cried, bursting out laughing and feeling more at my ease, "why, we've scarcely spoken to one another."

"That's nice," he said, drawing a long breath. "Over again."

"Over again? What?" I said.

"Call me John," he replied.

"Well, then, John," I cried hastily.

"That's right, Prudence; but, as I was going to say, not spoken to one another! Well, how could we, always taking our turns at the tide as we were? But all the same, my lass, I've been always courting of you, night and day, these four years, and looking out and watching for the time when the Prudence would come in sight and I could give you a hail and a wave of the hand back."

I could feel the color coming up into my cheeks again as I heard him speak, and knew how anxiously I had looked out for his barge coming up or down the river; and then I began wondering what it all meant, and soon [illegible]

"Prudence, my lass," he said, "I've saved up £10, all my own, and our owner has just given me the command of a new barge, with as pretty a cabin in as you'd wish to see; and so, my lass, I thought I'd ask you if so be as now we've been courting four years, you wouldn't come to me and be my wife."

"No," I said, "no," and shook my head. "I belong to father, and I could never leave him—never."

"But you'll have to some day, Prudence," he said, looking dreadfully downhearted and miserable.

"No," I said, "I shall never leave him; he wants me more and more every day and I must stay."

"Prudence," he said sharply, "you ain't playing with me, are you?"

"Playing with you?"

"Yes; I mean you ain't going to take up with any one else, and go aboard any other barge, are you?" he cried. "I won't be so mean as to ask you that. But, Prudence, dear, some day you may have to leave him, and when you do will you please recollect as John Grove loves you better than aught else in the wide world, and is waiting for you to come?"

"Yes, John," I said simply.

"You mean it, Prudence?" he cried in delight, as he caught my hand.

"Yes, John; I don't know anybody else, and there's no one as cares for me."

"Hundreds on the river," he said sharply.

"Then I don't care for them, John," I said simply; "and if you like me, and ever—oh, do leave off, dear! what am I saying?"

I sat down on a fender and covered my face with my coarse, red hands, and began to cry; but he took my hands down, and looked long and lovingly in my face, with his great, honest brown eyes; and then he couldn't speak, but seemed to choke. At last he gasped out:

"Thanky, Prudence, thanky. I'm going away now to wait, for you'll come to me some day, I know."

I didn't answer him.

"For the time may come, my lass, when you'll be all alone in the world; and when it does come, there's the cabin of the Betsy Ann, clean painted up, and waiting for you, just as her master's awaiting, too."

He went quietly over the side and cast off the rope, and was gone before I knew it; and I sat there in the calm afternoon and evening, sometimes crying, sometimes feeling hopeful, and with a sense of joy at my heart such as I never had felt before.

And so that evening deepened into night, with the barge a quarter of a mile astern of us, and no wind coming, only the tide to held us on our way.

It must have been about ten o'clock at night, when I was on board seeing to the light hoisted up to keep anything from running into us, when I heard father come stumbling up from the cabin, and make as if to come forward to me.

"Prue," he cried, "Prue!"

"Yes, father, coming," I said; and then I uttered a wild shriek and rushed toward where the boat hung astern by her painter, hauled her up and climbed in; for no sooner had I answered than I heard a cry and a heavy splash, and I knew father had gone overboard.

I was into the boat in a moment and had the scull over the stern, paddling away in the direction the cry had come from; but, though I fancied in those horrible minutes that I saw a hand stretched out of the water, asking, as it were, for help, I paddled and sculled about till I was far from our barge, and then sank down, worn out, to utter a moan of horror, and sob, "Oh, father! father! what shall I do?"

"Is that you, Prudence?" said a voice.

"Yes, John, yes," I cried, looking out through the darkness, out of which a boat seemed to steal until it was alongside, when John stretched out his hand and took mine.

"Quick!" I gasped, "save him, John—father—gone overboard!"

"When you shrieked out, Prue?"

"Yes, yes," I wailed; "oh, save him, save him!"

"My poor lass," he said, "that's a good quarter of an hour ago and the tide's running strong. I've been paddling about ever since trying to find you, for I went up to the barge and you were gone."

"But father," I wailed, "father—save him!"

"My poor little lass," he said tenderly, "I'd jump into the water now if you bid me, but what can I do, you know, Prudence; what can I do?"

I did not answer, for I did know that he must have been swept far away before then; and I was beginning to feel that I was alone—quite alone in the world.

It was quite six months after that dreadful night that one evening John came ashore from his barge to the cottage, where I was staying with his mother and had been ever since he had brought me there without seeing him to speak to, only to wave my hand to him as he sailed by. That evening he came and looked wistfully at me and said but little, and at last his time was up and he rose to go.

I walked down to his boat with him, and on the way he told me that he had got leave to alter the name of his barge, and it was called the Prudence, too; and then, without a word about the past, he was saying good-by, when I put my hands in his and said quietly:

"John, dear, I haven't forgot my promise."

"And you are alone now, Prudence, my lass?" he cried eagerly.

"No, John, no!" I said softly, as the tears ran down my cheeks; "I never shall be while you live."

"Never, my lass, never," he cried. "And you'll be my little wife?"

"Yes, John, yes; I promised you."

"When I come back from this voyage?"

"Yes, John, when you will," I said, and with one long hand pressure we parted, and I went back to wait for another month, and then I was his happy little wife.

And there seemed no change, for I was once more on the river or out at sea, leaning upon the tiller and gazing straight before me, with the gulls wailing as they wheeled and dipped and skimmed, or settled upon the water, while the soft wind gently stirred the print hood that was tightly tied over my wind ruffled hair. Only a bargeman's young wife living on the tide, but very happy, for John often points to the great ships that pass us, with their captains in their long-laced caps, and as he does so he whispers:

"Not with the best among them, Prue; not with the best. I wouldn't even change places with a king."

And if he is as happy as I, dear John is right.—Cassell's Magazine.

From [illegible] Week

[illegible] and [illegible] that her [illegible] determined attitude and [illegible] the [illegible] part will frequently [illegible] the [illegible] But it may quite as [illegible] life [illegible] rupture and [illegible] with in any painful memories [illegible] A polite woman can [illegible] tide the balance will [illegible] after a three years courtship [illegible] within our experience followed by a happy marriage after the same period [illegible] while [illegible] dered irreparable by one of the parties marrying a fresh love How far the separation of twin souls is justifiable after years of engaged life is a question often raised The point is nice enough to have [illegible] skill of Addison's love casuist An instance lately came to our knowledge in which the lady after complacently resting in an engagement of actually twenty years had the strength of mind to refuse matrimony when pressed upon her and strengthened beyond any reasonable objection by the acquisition of the long coveted rectory and four hundred a year on the plea that her health was now not equal to marriage Of course the unfortunate lover warmly expostulated and expressed his entire willingness to take the lady spite of her health but it was of no avail We are of opinion that he was grievously wronged and hold that a woman who should draw back after so antediluvian a period [illegible] contracted Having [illegible] it is unlikely [illegible] of [illegible] beside which his [illegible] must be considerably shaken and [illegible] ably glad to find the sentiments of Euripides and Milton on misogyny so much in harmony with his own The offending lady in such a case may rest assured that she has not only made a man miserable who deserved a much better fate but has also created a [illegible] enemy of her own sex A long engagement thus unfortunately terminated is worse for them than no engagement at all It [illegible] general mistrust [illegible] sides which [illegible] universal [illegible] by women [illegible] of treachery by a man during a long engagement [illegible] But when the woman abjures matrimony and [illegible] the case may be [illegible] food [illegible] love and trust which subsist between engaged people are broken down

It has often been disputed whether long engagements are the best preliminary to a happy marriage Doubtless there is less of passion and more of deep tried affection in the marriage that closes a long engagement But this is compensated by the parties having long since acquired a thorough knowledge of each other's tastes and tempers so that many a quicksand and shoal that might at the outset wreck other ventures upon the sea of matrimony is skillfully avoided The pair have had opportunities of bringing their hearts into harmony which are denied to those who have married after a hasty courtship [illegible] other which forms so large a part of [illegible] may say to the [illegible] faithfully kept [illegible] reasonable hope [illegible] Affection and the [illegible] space and time [illegible] and upholds the [illegible] gagement possesses [illegible] life [illegible] tion can vie with [illegible] charms of hope Behind [illegible] time during which the devoted pair did not know each other but in front spreads an enchanted land

THE FLYING MACHINE

[illegible]

The Philadelphia Press gives the following account of the flying machine [illegible] tested at the Exhibition building Nearly a hundred gentlemen including the directors of the permanent exhibition representatives of the press and others assembled at the main building to witness a practical test of the invention and as the inventor and his assistants quickly completed the preliminary preparations the guests gathered around an interested group, to discuss the chances of a successful trip At half past three o'clock the professor gave those present an opportunity to inspect the ship which was then fastened to the flooring of the music stand in the main building The machine may be described by terming it an elongated balloon to which is suspended a steering apparatus The balloon part consists of a large cylindrical gas bag, twenty four feet long and [illegible] feet in diameter This is [illegible] thoroughly gas tight Suspended to the balloon is a frame work of light, polished [illegible] rods on which the operator sits and works the steering apparatus Some idea of the form of this car may be obtained by describing it as the skeleton of a single scull such as are frequently in use on the Schuylkill Imagine that the stern of the boat is cut off right behind the rower and it gives the idea exactly On the stern of this skeleton frame work is placed a four bladed air propeller The operator is placed in something like a velocipede seat and has in front of him a wheel which is turned by hand [illegible] its axis Directly underneath the [illegible] is another air propeller something like that of a steamship This has a downward motion and when the wheel is turned revolves with something like 2000 revolutions per minute When the operator is seated on the machine the entire weight of the whole apparatus exceeds the lifting capacity by two pounds in other words that amount of power has to be exerted by the propeller downward on the air to raise the machine Shortly after 4 o'clock the signal was given and the huge ship slowly ascended It was found however that a lighter operator was required, and a small boy with considerable pluck and promptitude volunteered to act as the aeronaut He got into the seat turned the wheels the fan propeller revolved and the airship rose slowly and steadily some fifty feet Here descending to the orders of the inventor it was sent forward backwards turned in a circle and made to ascend and descend at will The tests demonstrated very conclusively that in the still atmosphere of a building the balloon can be controlled but it is difficult to see how the same results could be obtained in the outer air As it is however the huge balloon sailing [illegible] the great building will [illegible] attract large crowds of spectators and the trial trips will add much to the [illegible] of the world of [illegible] building

KELLOGG PAYS OFF AN OLD SCORE

[illegible]

The Washington [illegible] May [illegible]

[illegible]

What is the attitude [illegible]

[illegible]

I am not talking about [illegible] reply said it was the opinion of Mr [illegible] livered in his official capacity [illegible] Mr Hayes in his capacity of president to adjust a disputed gubernatorial succession in a state of this union Now [illegible] will agree with me that an administration [illegible] to be bound by its own construction [illegible] will you not

Does the administration [illegible] of it apprehend the possible application [illegible] own doctrine [illegible]

[illegible] kicking powers of the legal [illegible] Packard [illegible] point [illegible] have [illegible] such thing would ever be attempted

Suppose Mr Kellogg that [illegible] gress should meet and organize [illegible] working majority of Democrats [illegible] branches as it undoubtedly [illegible] under Mr Evarts' construction of the [illegible] constitution would be the mode [illegible] [illegible] Hayes

[illegible] disposed [illegible] the lawful president [illegible] would be given to Mr [illegible] him and [illegible] confirmed by the senate, and Mr Hayes would [illegible] it was done in [illegible] lawful [illegible]

Suppose Hayes should resist

[illegible]

What would be the [illegible]

[illegible] up

So would Hayes

[illegible]

Now let's [illegible] that Mr Hayes was elected by [illegible] Packard [illegible] grounds [illegible] the [illegible] Hayes [illegible] which they [illegible] Packard was [illegible] held that Hayes was elected [illegible] Hayes through his [illegible] of state instructed the commission that the question as to who had been elected governor must be adjudged by the legislative body [illegible] with an unquestioned right [illegible] their seats [illegible] to the Union as to a state and Mr Hayes and his friends will have no alternative but to submit to it if it should happen to be [illegible]

HAYES AND CONKLING

[illegible]

Washington Special [illegible]

It has been for some time [illegible] administration was anxious [illegible] mode by which it could live in [illegible] party with Senator Conkling [illegible] ing investigation has quickened [illegible] For the past three months Senator [illegible] has made no secret of the fact that [illegible] it extremely difficult, and [illegible] him to defeat in their New York [illegible] as he did [illegible] With this [illegible] existing [illegible] were submitted to Hayes and Conkling by mutual friends [illegible] the [illegible] Henry G Stebbins expressed [illegible] park [illegible] The administration [illegible] purpose is clearer than [illegible] of the Republican party in New York [illegible] the best terms possible

Communism in America

(From the Cincinnati Commercial

The [illegible] ness of communism in America [illegible] the fact that a great majority of the people are property owners and in that [illegible] They own their own farms [illegible] graph lines and so on and feel abundantly able to manage them without the supervision of [illegible] Moreover [illegible] presents their own labor with head and hand and the investment of the [illegible] and savings In a society so constituted the proposition to transfer all property to the government or cause it to be seized by the government or to be distributed [illegible] among the people can no more take root and flourish than the morals of Dick Turpin who [illegible] for robbery on the highway by distributing among the poor what he plundered from the rich

Inviting Defeat.

From the Boston Journal

We cannot tell about the feeling in Pennsylvania but suspect that there is a sufficiently large number of Republicans who sympathize with the general aims of the president to make it impossible for the party to win a victory in that state should they decline to support the ticket In view of this it seems exceedingly unwise for ex Senator Simon Cameron to declare in a speech that the Republican party is strong enough to bear all the wounds which President Hayes and men like him can bring on it The Republican party in the past has suffered most from too much Cameron But so long as he remains quiet no one is disposed to assail him When however he assails such a man as President Hayes he is simply inviting defeat

DECISION IN THE U S CIRCUIT COURT BY JUDGE DEADY

U S Circuit Court District of Oregon

Friday May [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] the citizenship of the parties rather than in abatement of the action

But the vendee of the plaintiff is not a party to this action and therefore it is immaterial what is his citizenship If it was sought to substitute him as a party to the action in place of the plaintiff [illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible] But it is said that the California [illegible] expressly authorizing the court in the case of a voluntary transfer [illegible] the action to be continued in the name of the original party or to [illegible] This provision [illegible] not in the Oregon Code and it may therefore be admitted that under it there is no power to substitute the person to whom the transfer is made for the plaintiff But what follows Why simply that the action must be prosecuted in the name of the original plaintiff unless it is to abate [illegible] which [illegible] It is plain then that [illegible] having provided that [illegible] shall not abate on account of the transfer of any interest therein it follows as a matter of course that [illegible] the real party in interest may be [illegible] to [illegible] in his own name notwithstanding a transfer of his interest therein [illegible]

No decision of the supreme court of this state upon the point has been cited So far as the question before the court is concerned the statutes of Oregon and California are the same and the cases decided under the latter are directly in point Upon the statute of this state there appears to be no room for argument It is expressly provided that an action shall not abate by reason of any transfer of interest therein and therefore it must continue and be proceeded as though such transfer had not taken place

It follows that the facts set up in the proposed answer are immaterial in this action and therefore the application is denied

But probably this motion ought not to be disposed of without noticing the fact that the proposed answer not only alleges the transfer of the premises by the plaintiff but that the person to whom such transfer was made is a citizen of the same state as the defendant—the state of Oregon and that therefore this court has no jurisdiction of the cause It would seem from this and some phases of the argument for the motion that this supplemental answer was intended as a plea to the jurisdiction of the court on the point of
